Mr. Stanley Houghton's little comedy, The Dear Departed, is a clever and humorous depiction of a phase in human affairs which the cynical, like himself, will admit takes place with sufficient frequency to justify its adoption as a theme for the enterprising playwright. As a matter of fact, it has been treated already in story form, but in a more serious and gruesome style, by a French writer. Nevertheless, it has enough freshness to be acceptable, as a new contribution to the stage, and Mr. Houghton may be congratulated on having dealt with his material in an entertaining and convincing style. The situation is simple enough. Abel Merryweather, a convivial soul, has just died, and two married daughters, Mrs. Slater and Mrs. Jordan, are very much concerned about the disposal of his effects. All the possibilities in this direction, as to the grasping character of the ladies and the value of the dear departed's belongings, are well exploited, and there are many humorous home threats which are calculated to "get right there" with the average audience. But it happens, much to their consternation, that Abel is, after all, not dead. He comes downstairs, and even takes tea with his daughters. The reaction in them is well depicted, and the defeat of their object, with all its little differences, is driven home by his announcement that he intends to get married again. Remarkably good work was put in by Miss Ada King and Miss Louise Holbrook as the sisters, Mrs. Slater and Mrs. Jordan; and as Abel Merryweather Mr. Edward Landor found a part well suited to his talents. Mr. Henry Austin, Miss Enid Meek, and Mr. Joseph A. Keogh each had opportunities in minor rôles, and the piece went well from first to last. The author was called upon to acknowledge the plaudits of a delighted house.

HENRY RUSSELL, the accomplished composer of some of the most stirring melodies in English music, was born about the year 1815. At an early age he exhibited a decided taste for the profession he subsequently adorned, which being remarked, induced his friends to send him to Italy, where, under the direction of the maestro, Rossini, he completed his musical education. Returning to this country, he married about the year 1836, Miss Lloyd, a granddaughter of the well-known Birmingham banker. He shortly after embarked with his young wife for America, where he commenced a series of entertainments. The novelty of these performances, coupled with the impressive, brilliant, and original songs introduced into them, and the great mimetic powers of the performer, conspicuously exhibited in his delineations of the Yankee, French, Italian, and Negro characters, speedily achieved a great reputation for Mr. Russell in the United States. On his return to England he found that the echo of his fame had preceded him. In the selection of the words of his songs, many of which are written by Mr. Charles Mackay, Mr. Russell showed considerable judgment; in them he always kept particularly the working classes in view—preaching in melodies wholesome maxims and wise truths; stirring hope by his "Good Time Coming, Boys!" repressing vice—the vices of drinking and gaming—by the tragical inspirations of "The Dream of the Reveller," and "The Gambler's Wife"; animating patriotism by his immortal "Britannia, the Pride of the Ocean"; and awakening the best feelings of the heart by such homely, soothing lyrics as "Woodman, Spare that Tree," "The Old Arm Chair," and by a host of other songs which recur at once to the memory at the mention of the name of Henry Russell.

LONDON & SUBURBAN THEATRES.

KING'S THEATRE, HAMMERSMITH.

On Monday, Nov. 2, the Farcical Comedy, by C. H. Hawtrey, entitled
"THE PRIVATE SECRETARY."

This perennial comedy appears to have lost none of its powers of attraction. It certainly shows little trace of age, and the misadventures of the mild and meek curate give rise to as much amusement as ever. Many artists since risen to fame have achieved success as the Rev. Robert Spalding, and the acting of Mr. Donald Price Evans in the part does not lose by comparison. His woebegone appearance and manner are in themselves funny, and are amply appreciated. A refreshing performance of Mr. Marsland, M.F.H., is given by Mr. Frank Stanley, and Mr. Andrew Wight is an excellent Harry Marsland. Mr. Wm. Hargreaves, who has played the character times out of number, is again a very droll and substantial Mr. Cattermole, the peppery uncle from India. As Douglas Cattermole Mr. Lawrence Grove succeeds admirably in giving a pleasant impersonation. Mr. Frederick Tyrell gives an exceedingly good representation of the Bond-street tailor, Sidney Gibson. Miss Ashford is well played by Mrs. Alfred Davis, and Miss Cecily Wade as the landlady is amusing. Miss Violet Darling makes a bright and pleasing Edith Marsland, and Miss Edith Savery is charming as Eva Webster. A short and boisterous farce, entitled The Wild Man from Borneo, capitally played by members of the company, serves to fill up a pleasant evening's entertainment.

THE MARLBOROUGH.

On Monday, Nov. 2, W. Somerset Maugham's Comedy,
"JACK STRAW."

On Monday this new comedy by Mr. W. Somerset Maugham was played here for the first time in the suburbs, to the manifest delight of a large audience. Messrs. Lionel Glenister and J. W. Wood-Ingram (by arrangement with Messrs. A. and S. Gatti) are touring the play with the entire company from the Vaudeville Theatre, including Miss Florence St. John and Mr. Lionel Glenister. In this comedy the chief interest centres in the characters of Jack Straw and Mrs. Parker-Jennings, parts most admirably sustained by Mr. Glenister and Miss St. John. Mr. Glenister is singularly at home in his rôle. He has considerable scope and does not fail to make the most of his part. A very hearty reception was accorded Miss St. John on her entry, and the skilful way in which she interprets the part of Mrs. Parker-Jennings is very warmly appreciated. The highest praise must be accorded her for her portrayal, a character to which this artist lends herself admirably. Mr. Frederick Moyers is to be complimented on his depiction of Ambrose Holland, a very natural piece of acting. Mr. J. Edgar Stevenson is eminently successful as the Marquis of Serlo in Act II., specially winning general commendation from the audience in the scene with Miss Lucy Milner, who enacts the part of Ethel Parker-Jennings. Miss Milner makes the rôle a very lovable one, and gives a most delightful impersonation. As Mr. Parker-Jennings Mr. A. T. Gullifer gives a very amusing assumption, and Mr. Christmas Grose deserves special praise for his excellent delineation of the young upstart Vincent Parker-Jennings. It is a part that could be easily overdone, but Mr. Grose is careful not to overstep the mark. Mr. Ernest Graham is well placed as the Rev. Lewis Abbott, and Mr. J. W. Wood-Ingram makes a capital H. E. Count Adrian von Bremer. Miss Edie Graham is another artist deserving of commendation. She very naturally portrays the part of Lady Wanley, a fine stage presence materially assisting her. Miss Estelle Despa is excellent as Mrs. Withers, and Miss Jessica Waters is to be complimented on her depiction of Rosie Abbott. The characters of Cora Bellevue, Servant and Head Waiter, are well filled by Miss May Poole, Messrs. Charles Randall, and Wm. Elliott. Magnificently mounted, the performance goes with a directness which pointed to well-placed artists and experienced stage management. The principals were repeatedly called before the curtain, and all concerned must have felt gratified at the conclusion of the initial suburban performance. For Messrs. Lionel Glenister and Mr. J. W. Wood-Ingram, Mr. George Waters undertakes the business management, and to Mr. J. Edgar Stevenson are entrusted the duties of stage-manager. Jack Straw is preceded by A Long Journey, by Marie Muggeridge, and the characters are well represented by Miss Lucy Milner (Constance Ford), Miss Estelle Despa (Mme. Bontemps), Mr. Ernest Graham (Bobby), and Mr. Christmas Grose (Rex Hardy).

CORONET THEATRE.

On Monday, Nov. 2, the Musical Comedy, entitled
"THE GAY GORDONS."

The Coronet Theatre, under Mr. Eade Montefiore's business management is rapidly becoming quite a West End theatre and severing its connection with suburbia altogether, except that the prices are more reasonable and a weekly change of programme is ensured. This week a crowded and enthusiastic audience welcomed Miss Ellaline Terriss and Mr. Seymour Hicks with their star company, very nearly identical with the one recently scintillating at the Aldwych Theatre in The Gay Gordons. Never has Mr. Seymour Hicks seemed in better form or in higher spirits. His brilliant mercurial method, his versatility and volatility are brought into ample play in the picturesque part of Angus Graeme, the gay Gordon who turns out to be the real Earl of Meltrose. The scene on the highland moorlands and again the spectacle of the Earl of Meltrose's welcome to his own castle is very stirring and exhilarating. Miss Ellaline Terriss is daintiness and grace personified as Peggy Quainton, the high-spirited Yankee heiress, and her songs, "Humpty and Tumpty" and "They all like me in London," among many other vocal morceaux, are charmingly and delightfully rendered with winsome and arch suggestiveness. Miss Sidney Fairbrother continues her triumphal progress as the showman's wife Charlotte Siddons, and her performance is quite an effort of genius in its rich humour and character portrayal. Mr. Johnny Danvers is full of unctuous humour as Nervy Natt, the old showman, her worser half, and he has a capital song, "It is, if she says so." Mr. George Carroll is quaint in the extreme as the microbe Edmund Siddons, who, with Viccy Siddons, completes this remarkable family group. Mr. E. Lugg is excellent as "Poppa" Quainton and Mr. Lawrence Caird contributes some capital fooling as Corporal John Smith. Miss Maud Milton is quite delightful as the dear old foster-mother Janet McLeod, and Miss Coralie Blythe as Victoria Siddons is both bright and pretty, nimble of toe, and a most capable comedienne. Mr. Will Bishop contributes some extraordinarily clever callisthenic exercises, and Miss Katie Butler sings and acts with verve and enthusiasm. The beauty of the "Hicks" girls is renowned, and the chorus is well up to the mark in elegance and attractiveness, and the noble lords are well represented by Messrs. H. Ulph, M. Florance, E. Dewey Gibson, H. Walter, and A. Metcalf, one of whom possesses an excellent voice. Mr. J. C. Buckstone is droll as the excited solicitor Archibald Speedy. The augmented orchestra is under the direction of Frank Tours, Messrs. Harry Ulph and R. Chester stage manage the show, and Mr. C. E. Hamilton assists at the front of the house.

THE CROWN, PECKHAM.

On Monday, Nov. 2, the Play, entitled
"THE PRODIGAL SON."

This is by no means the first visit that The Prodigal Son has paid to the Crown, Peckham, but judging from Monday's audience it is still very popular. Mr. Wentworth Croke's company presents the play to the best possible advantage. Mr. Hugh Montgomery makes a fine, virile Magnus Stephensson, Mr. Gordon Mackintosh plays admirably in the difficult character of Oscar Stephensson, availing himself to the full of the opportunities offered by the author. Miss Valerie Crespin, who plays the dual rôles of the ill-fated young wife Thora Neilson and the child Elin, gives a pleasing and distinctive touch to each character. Mr Charles Cooper is a dignified Governor of Iceland, and Miss Mildred Cottell acts with much power as the evil genius of the play, Helga Neilson. Mr. Philip Renouf as Oscar Neilson, Mr. Charles A. Maynard as Nells Finsen, Mr. E. Christopher as the Sheriff, Miss Marie Harcourt as Margaret, and Miss Barbara Gott as Anna all supply excellent character sketches. The scenery and effects are admirable.

THE KENNINGTON.

On Monday, Nov. 2, the Comic Opera, entitled
"DOROTHY."

The revival of Dorothy by Mr. Oswald Stoll's company, headed by Messrs. Hayden Coffin and John Coates, has been greeted with enthusiasm by the playgoing public, and its reception at Kennington this week has been no exception to the rule. Many may perhaps remember the unparalleled success which this play achieved upon its first appearance, and in its beauty and brilliancy the present setting rivals the original. Mr. Hayden Coffin as Harry Sherwood gives an accurate representation of a typical eighteenth-century gallant, his cultured voice securing for him a complete success. Mr. John Coates is received with wild enthusiasm in the rôle of Geoffrey Wilder. His voice, renowned for its extraordinary power, compass, and sweetness, is certainly heard at its best in several charming lyrics. As Dorothy Bantam Miss Ruth Davenport exceeded the highest expectations. Seldom is there to be seen a more artistic combination of beauty, grace, and talent. Her clear soprano voice, of excellent quality, seems particularly adapted to the beautiful plaintive airs to which this operatic comedy owes so much of its popularity. Miss Hebe Bliss as Lydia Hawthorne is a contralto of great power, and she displays her vocalisation to great advantage in her several duets with Dorothy. The inimitable Mr. Arthur Williams as Lurcher is eminently the jester of the piece, and throughout he keeps the audience convulsed; Mr. Colin Coop's Squire Bantam is a typical eighteenth-century country gentleman; Miss Aimee Roberts gives a prepossessing interpretation of the character of Philliss Tuppitt, in which she uses a capital voice to great advantage; Mr. Tim Ryley is seen at his best as Tom Strutt; the part of Mrs. Privett is admirably sustained by Miss Emily Spiller; Miss Primrose Harding as Lady Betty gives every satisfaction; and Mr. Fred J. Vigay handles the part of John Tuppitt with skill. The whole production is on a magnificent scale. The scenery is beautiful, and the piece is becomingly dressed in eighteenth-century style.

THE SHAKESPEARE.

On Monday, Nov. 3, the Play in Four Acts, entitled
"WHY, MEN LOVE WOMEN."

The attraction at the Shakespeare Theatre this week is the romantic play from the pen of Walter Howard, Why Men Love Women. Like other plays by the same author, the piece abounds with incidents of absorbing interest, and the story of love and intrigue is clothed with a cloak of romance that appeals strongly to the hearts of popular audiences, and rouses them to a state of enthusiasm. Warm applause was accorded Miss Ellen Snow's talented company at the close of the opening performance on Monday evening. The play, produced by arrangement with Messrs. Paumier and Howard, was capably enacted throughout, and the excellent scenery assisted the success of the performance. Mr. Oliver Rogers gave a masterly interpretation of the English artist, Gerald Fielding, his vigorous manner and earnestness being well suited to the part. Mr. Lionel Gadsden was very successful in the somewhat thankless rôle of the scheming Russian officer, Captain Staniloff, and acted throughout with dramatic force and energy. Another good performance was that of Mr. H. Carter Slaughter, whose delineation of Lieutenant Tommy Fitzherbert received hearty acknowledgment. A fine character study of the Maranajah of Balore was contributed by Mr. Ernest Griffen, whose bearing and manner of expression was well in keeping with the rôle. Mr. W. Norman made the most of his opportunities as the Rev. Arthur Grey, as did also Mr. Arthur Radford as Chundra Singh. The humour in the play is supplied by Mr. Harwood Roberts as Orlando Figgins, who is well supported by Miss Nita Owen as Birdie, Miss Freda Vaughan as Baby, and Miss Beresford Glynn as Mrs. Figgins. Miss Ellen Snow as Violet Livingstone was a great success, and effectively portrayed the varying emotions of the part. Her powerful acting held the attention of the audience throughout, and at the close of the performance was accorded an ovation. Miss Florence Nelson's impersonation of the passionate and revengeful Muriel Zoluski left nothing to be desired, and the minor parts were in capable hands.

ARTILLERY THEATRE, WOOLWICH.

On Monday, Nov. 2, the Play, entitled
"THE FLAG LIEUTENANT."

Produced on lavish scale, The Flag Lieutenant is received with every mark of favour. Messrs. Lyn Harding and Sidney Cooper have got together a very powerful company, every member of the cast showing ability, and the rendering of the various parts meeting with cordial appreciation. The dresses and uniforms are excellent, and the general attention to detail is a noteworthy feature. Mr. Langhorne Burton gives a very breezy performance of the happy-go-lucky flag lieutenant, Richard Lascelles. Mr. George Mallett sustains the part of Vice-Admiral Sir Berkeley Wynne with dignity and the necessary semblance of authority. Mr. Montagu Love as Major Thesiger acts with sincerity, and is nicely suited to the character. Mr. Edward S. Petley offers a good study of a cool-headed doctor in the person of Walter Crutchley, surgeon, R.N. Mr. Hugh Wakefield and Mr. Lyonel Watts, in the respective characters of Horatio Hood and Edward Dormer Lee, offer mirthful representations. Mr. John Wheatman achieves distinction as the Irish telegraphist, Michael Palliser. Mr. William Gregson is good as James Sloggett. Mr. W. J. Teldham is happily suited as General Gough-Bogle; and the same may be said of Mr. Claude Little as John Penrose and Mr. Stephen Gatling as Christopher Neate; while Mr. Frederick Leister essays the rôle of Colonel McLeod in a natural manner. Miss Florence Jackson provides a clever study of Mrs. Cameron; Miss Marjorie Chard displays ability as Lady Hermione Wynne; and Miss Viva Birkett as Viola Hood. Miss Stella Leigh as Mrs. Gough-Bogle and Miss Evelyn Robson as Lady Dugdale are both capably undertaken.

THEATRE ROYAL, STRATFORD.

On Monday, Nov. 2, the Drama, in Four Acts, by Arthur Shirley and Benjamin Landeck, entitled
"THE KING OF CRIME."

The return visit of this piece to the Stratford Theatre Royal is attracting excellent audiences this week, and the many thrilling situations and exciting incidents elicit rounds of applause. Mr. Harry Battersby's company is responsible for the interpretation of the piece, which is staged and dressed very appropriately. Mr. F. B. Woulfe as Ronjarre, the king of crime, submits a very powerful performance, his fine physique and incisive acting suiting the part splendidly; Mr. William Miller supplies a well-defined sketch of the old miser, Grandelle; Mr. Claude Aymond plays in forcible style as Simon; Mr. William Mervyn is a manly and outspoken Louis Mascorot; Mr. Sam Wilford is always amusing as Mick Maloney, and Mr. Walter Hilton cleverly delineates Taberet. Miss Mildred Eversleigh is responsible for a sympathetic performance as Henriette; Miss Nance Battersby plays with charm and expression as Mathilde; Miss Agnes d'Aragon renders the old hag, Mere Crouchard, sufficiently vicious without exaggerating the part; and Clarisse is brightly played by Miss Edith Loraine. Other parts are in quite capable hands.

CRYSTAL PALACE THEATRE.

On Monday, Nov. 2,
"OUR FLAT."

Had it been a new production, instead of one of our best-known dramatic "hardy annuals," this play could not have had a better reception than it did, and the reason is not far to seek, when one reviews the well-chosen company of artists who give point and power to every funny situation with which the play fairly bristles. Mr. Charles Stewart walked so easily and naturally through the part of Reginald Sylvester, the very hard-up author of unpublished tragedies, that some of his witty speeches had almost the appearances of after-thoughts rather than efforts to shine, and he was most ably supported by Miss Daisy Atherton, who looked charming in several pretty dresses. The manner in which she brought down the curtain in the first act when alone on the stage gave evidence of much dramatic power. Mr. Fred Knight as Mr. McCullum, the flinty-hearted father-in-law, was a clever study, and always in the picture. Mr. Wilfred E. Shine as Nathaniel Glover (Willie Edouin's old part) brought out all the eccentricities associated with this character and caused much mirth. Lucy McCullum was effectively embodied by Miss Katie Yates, and Mr. Kaye Brudell as Clarence Vane proved himself efficient. The servant-maid Bella, as acted by Miss Louie Tinsley was a "pure joy," her comically slovenly appearance and extremely clever impersonation of the domestic of the Sylvester flat creating roars of deserved laughter. Miss Irene Moncrieff was excellent as Madame Volant, and Miss May Yates was appropriately exuberant as little Clara Pryout. Mr. John Morris made quite a little character part of Stout, the hall-porter, and Mr. S. R. Mayne as the Scotch foreman of the hire-furnishing firm was good. The clever second act, where the seized furniture is replaced by an assortment of boxes, barrels, &c., covered with pillows and drapery, went as well as ever, and Mr. J. Bannister Howard can be congratulated on another successful engagement.

BRIXTON THEATRE.

On Monday, Nov. 2, the Drama, entitled
"THE SILVER KING."

A warm welcome was extended on Monday to the ever-green play of Mr. Henry Arthur Jones, Messrs. Austin Melford and G. M. Polini, who are responsible for the production, have surrounded themselves with a first-class company, with the result that a satisfactory interpretation is provided. Mr. F. D. Daviss' capital acting as Wilfred Denver evoked loud applause, and his striking portrayal of the unfortunate hero is to be highly praised. Miss Edyth Goodall, admirably cast as Nellie Denver, was very pathetic, and successful throughout in realising the character. Mr. E. Stanton Sharp's acting in the rôle of the Spider is deserving of eulogy. Mr. E. J. George thoroughly realises the character of the devoted retainer Daniel Jaikes, Mr. A. H. Rooke cleverly depicts Geoffrey Ware, Mr. A. Wright is realistic as the marine store-dealer. Mr. George Belmore is well placed as Henry Corkett, Mr. Fred May does good work as Cripps, Miss Kathleen Maude admirably plays the part of Olive Skinner, and Miss Louie Hale is successful as Tabitha Durdan. The remaining characters are all well played. The scenery is throughout very appropriate, and the whole performance deserves warm praise.

THE GRAND, FULHAM.

On Monday, Nov. 2, the Play by Anne Flexner, entitled
"MRS WIGGS OF THE CABBAGE PATCH."

Mrs. Wiggs is proving a powerful attraction at Fulham, for Mrs. Madge Carr Cook and the original company are paying a visit. The Cabbage Patch and its inhabitants are decidedly not English, and perhaps much of the charm of the piece is due to that fact, as well as to the delightful philosophy of Mrs. Wiggs herself. Mrs. Cook is, of course, inimitable in the title-rôle, and needs no further commendation. Miss Rita Carlyle gives rise to endless laughter by her amusing impersonation of the extraordinary Miss Hazy, and Miss Mabel Durrant as Mrs. Eichorn and Miss Violet Vivian as Mrs. Schultz are very successful in those character parts. Miss Christine Rayner is charming as Lovey Mary, and the same may be said of Miss Mary Deverell as Miss Lucy. Mr. Frederick Forrest displays rich humour in his acting of Mr. Stubbins, and Mr. Edward Coventry is very amusing as the matrimonial agent Hunkerdunkus Jones. Mr. Arthur Vezin and Mr. Sidney Carlyle act brightly and naturally as Billy Wiggs, and Chris Hazy, while Mr. W. M. Cameron strikes a deeper note as Mr. Wiggs. The various children all play their parts with great zest and naturalness, and the minor parts are well filled. The play has been received with every mark of approbation by good houses.

THEATRE ROYAL, WOOLWICH.

"FROM SHOP GIRL TO DUCHESS."

Miss Mary Neil and Mr. George Kirk and their company are this week providing most acceptable fare to the patrons of this theatre, who are ever ready to show their appreciation and offer a hearty response to a well-acted and liberally mounted play. From Shop Girl to Duchess, which by the way is from the prolific pen of Mr. Charles Darrell, fulfils these requirements, and consequently meets with the success that it deserves. Miss Mary Neil, in the character of Sylvia Grey, the shop girl, has a part which suits her to a nicety, and gives her plenty of scope to display her dramatic powers to the best advantage. Mr. Douglas Cecil essays the rôle of Arnold Vyvian in a spirited and manly fashion. Mr. Douglas Tremaine imparts much humour to the character of Pelham, and extracts much hearty laughter. Sir Morris Maitland, M.D., is very cleverly portrayed by Mr. T. Lionel Ellis, who scores highly as a kind-hearted doctor. Mr. F. S. Strickland undertakes the part of Gilbert Spate in a capable manner. Mr. Henry Gerald is diverting as Tommy Tinkler. Miss Florrie Grove shows aptness and a command of comedy, and is the source of much hilarity as Tilly Dobson. Miss Beatrice Hudson sustains the part of Lady Celeste Delamere in an able manner. Lady Cinderella Portcullis is amusingly portrayed by Miss Marie Clavering. Miss Amy B. Ellis submits a careful rendering of Isabel. The remaining members of the cast work well in their respective rôles.

PAVILION THEATRE, E.

"WOMAN AND WINE."

The patrons of this popular East End theatre have a great attraction this week in Arthur Shirley and Ben Landeck's striking drama, Woman and Wine, which is being presented in very good style by Mr. E. Vivian Edmonds' company. As the woman who didn't care, Marcel Rigadout, Miss C. St. Elmo displays power in an altogether effective character. Mary Andrews is plaintively presented by Miss Violet Sims. La Colombe, the jealous demi-mondaine is enacted with force and vigour by Miss Octavia de Noel, while blunt Janet Marlow is made the most of by Miss Ethel Vinroy. The weak Dick Seymour is rendered by Mr. E. Vivian Edmonds in a manner which obtains the sympathy of the audience, and Mr. R. Foulis in the repulsive part of Alphonse Beaudet is very good. Professor Sauter, the geologist, is competently played by Mr. W. Manning, Charles Sauter being humorously depicted by Mr. Harry Harrop. Mr. J. Milne Taylor is excellent as the blind Hugh Seymour, and Mr. Frank Thomas is a capable Mark Parkins. The remainder of a long cast is in very capable hands, and in such scenes as the Longchamps Racecourse, Le Bal Masqué, quite a number of people are seen upon the stage. The scenery, dresses, mounting, properties, &c., are in admirable taste.

BOROUGH THEATRE, STRATFORD.

On Monday, Nov. 2,
"THE TAMING OF THE SHREW."

Mr. Oscar Asche and Miss Lily Brayton have been so cordially received on previous visits to the Stratford Borough Theatre that the vociferous welcome they met with on Monday night was quite in the order of things. The Taming of the Shrew was in the bill, and with Mr. Asche and Miss Brayton in the principal rôles, supported by an exceptionally strong cast, and with the mounting on a lavish yet artistic scale, the performance gave unqualified pleasure to those who availed themselves of one of the dramatic treats which Mr. Fred Fredericks betimes presents to his patrons. Mr. Oscar Asche's performance as Petruchio, like Miss Lily Brayton's Katharina, has been so frequently lauded that further praise would be "painting the lily." Suffice it that at the conclusion of each act the curtain has to be raised again and again to acknowledge the clamorous plaudits of the audience. Mr. Herbert Grimwood plays with a sure touch and much fluency as Baptista; Mr. Kay Souper makes a handsome and gallant Lucentio; Mr. Caleb Porter admirably depicts Gremio; and Mr. R. Ian Penny is a buoyant and pleasing Hortensio. Mr. Henry Kitts is responsible for a very droll personation of Grumio; Mr. Tripp Edgar plays with much skill as Tranio; Mr. R. F. Anson is genuinely humorous as Biondello; and Mr. J. Fritz Russell's Vincentio is replete with ability. Miss Muriel Ashwynne very charmingly and appropriately plays Bianca; Miss Constance Robertson is successful as Curtis; and Miss Caroline Bayley plays a widow. At Wednesday's matinée, and on Friday evening, Othello was in the bill, while at the special matinée to be given to-day (Saturday) The Taming of the Shrew will be played.

DALSTON THEATRE.

On Monday, Nov. 2, the Play, by Hall Caine, entitled
"THE CHRISTIAN."

Mr. Wentworth Croke is presenting this week at the Dalston Theatre Hall Caine's play The Christian, and it is meeting with a very good reception. It is certainly ably acted. The company work well together, and the result is a performance which keeps the audience thoroughly well interested. There can be no two opinions concerning Mr. Roy Redgrave's impersonation of the character of the Hon. John Storm. Everyone who witnesses the performance can see that from the moment when, at his father's home, he renounces a political career for that of a Christian missioner, he is terribly in earnest. Apart from any other consideration the performance is a legitimate one from the actor's point of view. The Glory Quayle of Miss Daisy Scudamore impresses one as a character which is full of vigour, and that the actress succeeds in securing the good will of the audience is proved by the applause bestowed upon the performance. Mrs. Callender has a decisive representative in Miss Molly Hayden. Miss Cora Deane makes a thoroughly sympathetic Polly Love. Mr. Royce Milton is quite a dignified Lord Storm. A good deal that is bad so far as principle goes has to be done by Mr. Herbert Hewetson as Lord Robert Ure, but from the point of view of the artist he does it very well. Mr. Wilfred Noy is good as Horatio Drake, and the Father Lamplugh of Mr. Fewless Llewellyn is quite an interesting study, as is also the Archdeacon Wealthy of Mr. John Hooker, who is the self-satisfied, "established" cleric to the life. Miss Kitty Symons has quite the correct style as Lady Robert Ure; in fact, the chief merit of the representation is the natural way in which the members of the company settle down into the parts allotted to them.

NEW LYRIC, HAMMERSMITH.

"THE ASSASSIN."

The Assassin is certainly one of the best dramas that has been written on life in Russia, and its return visit to the Lyric is meeting with much appreciation. Mr. Augustine Knight, in the character of Prince Demetri, has been succeeded by Mr. H. Bonhote Wilson, who makes a handsome and commanding Prince, and interprets the dastardly character excellently. Mr. George N. Newall as Ivan Ipanoff plays with much success. Mr. Edwin Lever does well as Duke Carl. Mr. Edwin Jenner is distinctly good as Captain O'Neil. General Nicol, the Chief of the Police, is capably acted by Mr. Eugene Santley. Miss Ella Vane, as the Assassin, Countess Wanda, is capital; the character is no easy one, and the duel with Prince Demetri is well worked. Miss Eva Trevanna is a pathetic Nita. As the American, Connie Jonathan, Miss Hettie Senior becomes a strong favourite, her blunt observations being much liked by the "gods." The serious interest in the play has plenty of contrast in the really funny comedy scenes. Mr. Edward Swinton causes roars of laughter as the eccentric fool, Baron Alphonse. Mr. Tom J. Taylor as Peter is also very laughable, and the "silent" character, Evangle, is well played by Mr. James Abbott. The maid Katrina is smartly played by pretty Miss Marie Robertson. The costumes, uniforms, and scenery are all quite up to Mr. Knights' usual high standard of excellence.

COUNTY THEATRE, KINGSTON.

On Monday, Nov. 2, the Musical Play, by Gustav Kerker, entitled
"THE BELLE OF NEW YORK."

Another visit of The Belle to Kingston on Monday was hailed with a crowded house, who gave the popular play a reception that showed unmistakably that Kingstonians have not yet had too much of a good thing. The tuneful numbers, the clever dancing, the fine dresses, and the mirth of the thing appealed to them as powerfully as when the musical comedy was first seen years ago. The company is sent out by Mr. Geo. Musgrove, under the direction of Mr. J. Bannister Howard, and they all acquit themselves with credit. Miss Hebe Kneller makes a charming Belle, and soon becomes a prime favourite in every part of the house; and an equally big hit is made by Miss Dorothy Doria as Fifi. The dancing of Miss Florence Hersee as Mamie Clancy is much admired; and Miss Winnie Browne makes a handsome and commanding Cora Angelique. Amongst the male members of the company, chief honours are awarded to Mr. Frank Lawton, who appears in his original part of Blinky Bill; the part of the polite lunatic is portrayed by Mr. J. R. Tate with much success; and good work is also put in by Mr. Arthur Ricketts as Ichabod Bronson, by Mr. J. A. Watts as Harry Bronson, by Mr. A. Godfrey as Kenneth Mugg, and by Messrs. H. Kirke and R. L. Cody as the Portuguese twins. The new waltz scene, "Carezzante," now introduced into the play, in which Miss Brown and Mr. Watts take part, is a great success.

"THE ERA" can be obtained at the principal bookstalls throughout the provinces.

DINNER TO MR. AND MRS. FORBES-ROBERTSON AND THE REV. R. J. CAMPBELL.

Mr. T. P. O'CONNOR, M.P., presided at the New Vagabonds' November dinner, held on Sunday evening at the Hotel Cecil. The guests of the evening were Mr. and Mrs. J. Forbes-Robertson and the Rev. R. J. Campbell. Among others present were Mrs. Jerome K. Jerome and Miss Jerome, Mr. Pett Ridge, Mr. and Mrs. Phillips Oppenheim, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Emanuel, Mr. G. B. Burgin, Mr. and Mrs. Walter E. Grogan, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Lyons, Dr. Byrd-Page, Mr. Acton Bond, Mr. Douglas Sladen, and Mr. Tom Gallon.

The CHAIRMAN, in proposing "The Club Guests," said they would always be glad to honour Mr. and Mrs. Forbes-Robertson, and they honoured them specially in the very remarkable play in which they were now appearing. The success of their guests was associated with one of the oldest and most respected members of the club, Mr. Jerome K. Jerome, author of The Passing of the Third Floor Back. He (the chairman) would at this time reveal a secret. He was a relative of Mr. Forbes-Robertson. He had had the honour of standing as sponsor for that gentleman's nephew. He knew a great deal about their guests. He first knew of Mr. Forbes-Robertson not as Forbes-Robertson, but as Johnston. It was not a mere coincidence that that actor had been selected by Mr. Jerome as the impersonator of the principal character in the play, for there was something in Mr. Forbes-Robertson's character that enabled him to carry out such a part. In private life Mr. Forbes-Robertson was a man of honour and duty. For many years his affections were divided between the stage and brush, and it could be believed that he would have made a great success in either profession. His artistic career was part of the history of the stage and of the drama of the present generation. Many parts were associated with his name. His Hamlet was an epoch even in the performance of that great part. All the tragedy of Hamlet, all the sorrows and perplexities of this sad world had come home to him (the chairman) under the spell of Mr. Forbes-Robertson's acting of the part, in a way that it had never done before. The play of which they were celebrating the success that night marked an epoch, and a glorious epoch, in the history of the stage. It carried out the movement which had been gaining repute and force for the last twenty or twenty-five years. It fulfilled the demand that the drama should deal with life as a whole, that it should not avoid the serious and solemn issues and problems of human existence, but should be as broad as other forms of literature, and that nothing that touched humanity should be strange to it. He failed, therefore, to see any spirit of irreverence in the dramatic representation of the most beautiful and the most potent personality in the history of the world. If religion was to be a reality, it must be with us in the smallest daily transactions no less than in the supreme moments of our lives; and Mr. Jerome's play showed it operating in the meanest circumstances among the most sordid human beings. Mr. Jerome was justified in showing that even the commonest details of a life could be sanctified and exalted by the symbolism of Christ. The Chairman concluded by paying a high tribute to the acting of Mrs. Forbes-Robertson.

Mr. FORBES-ROBERTSON, in responding for himself and his wife, referred to what the chairman had described as the beautiful symbolism of Mr. Jerome's play. He had been very proud to have had the opportunity of producing it. The script was read to him and Mrs. Forbes-Robertson by Mr. Jerome. They were deeply moved by it, and at the conclusion of the reading he was somewhat embarrassed as to what he should say. When he thought of the nobility of the motive he decided that they must try it. The theme was so great, so appealing, that he could come to no other conclusion than that it would appeal to the public. Well, it had appealed, and the people had come, and the play had made a very great impression. There had been a certain amount of adverse criticism. A member of the company while travelling in an omnibus had overheard a conversation between two ladies. One of them said that the opening of the play was extremely funny until "that Forbes-Robertson comes in, converts them all, and spoils my evening." Another criticism was to the effect that a theme so great and so noble, a symbolism so feeling and so deep, should have been administered to people in a higher grade of society. After eulogising Mr. O'Connor's eloquence, Mr. Forbes-Robertson remarked that it was very difficult for an actor who had for many years presented himself in various characters, and who was obliged to learn words more or less beautiful, and speak them as best he might, to give an extempore address.

The Rev. R. J. CAMPBELL said that he desired to add a short tribute to the qualities of Mr. Jerome's play and to the acting of it by Mr. and Mrs. Forbes-Robertson. The central idea of the play was one that he had been trying to preach through the whole of his public ministry. When he went to see the play he had a misgiving that to seem to impersonate a transcendent personality would be repugnant to his feelings, but from the moment Mr. Forbes-Robertson entered the stage all his fears fled, and he realised that in him Mr. Jerome had found an ideal actor for his purpose. He did not, however, believe that Mr. Jerome had sought to put the figure of Jesus of Nazareth on the stage. Mr. Forbes-Robertson's part was that of the deeper, better self which resided in every man, which, in nine cases out of ten, was called forth by one who shared his belief in it. The only thing wanting in the play, if he might say so, was the note of commanding moral authority. He urged Mr. Jerome to give them another book, and Mr. Forbes-Robertson to produce another play showing a majestic Christ who had power to make a small deed look small, and to subdue the selfishness of a small man, not only by appealing to his better self, but by showing him the towering, unimaginable influence of Christ himself. Continuing, Mr. Campbell remarked that he thought the critics should take their profession more seriously. Many of them were too much inclined to find fault. The function of the critic was to tell a busy public what was good in a play and why it was good.

THE WALDORF THEATRE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE ERA.

SIR,—As there seems to be an impression abroad that I am in some way connected with the Waldorf Theatre, I think it only fair to Mr. Henry R. Smith to make it clearly understood that he is the sole manager of that theatre, and that the management is quite distinct from that of the Lyceum.

I am anxious that whatever credit may be due to anybody for the enterprise in question should go to the right party.—Yours faithfully,

ERNEST CARPENTER.

Lyceum Theatre, Strand,
London, W.C., Nov. 5.

A NEW one-act play, from the pen of D. Brandon, entitled Winter Sport, will be produced by Mr. Patrick Kirwan at a matinée at the Court Theatre on Wednesday, the 18th inst., in aid of the funds of the Hospital for Sick Children, Great Ormond-street. A Georgian duologue, entitled Priscilla, and Mr. Kirwan's adaptation, called The Fotheringay, of certain incidents in Thackeray's novel "Pendennis," will also be included in the programme.

THE METROPOLITAN WATER BOARD CHARGES

AS AFFECTING THEATRES AND MUSIC HALLS.

BY E. BAILEY-DENTON, M.INST.C.E., M.A. (Oxon.).

(SPECIAL TO The Era.)

The Metropolitan Water Board, in succession to the eight Water Companies hitherto supplying the metropolis, was constituted in 1902, and it was provided in the Act by means of which it was formed that such Board should, within three years, introduce into Parliament a Bill securing a uniform scale of charges applicable throughout the entire limits of its supply.

This Bill was subsequently sanctioned by Parliament, and came into operation on April 1, 1908. It enacts that for all buildings liable to the inhabited house duty a uniform rate of 5% on their rateable value shall under all circumstances be charged. Thus all consumers entitled to such supply are treated with uniformity, and are not subject to the varying charges exacted by the late water companies. There are thus no differences, and everybody is charged on the same basis. The charge now made includes the supply for baths and water closets, and is only exclusive of water consumed in the washing of carriages and horses, and the watering of gardens. This portion of the Act is just in principle, for the ordinary citizen pays upon a fair basis either for water which he does consume or for water which under ordinary circumstances he should consume. But there is another side to the question.

Section 9 of the Act which came into force on April 1 last states that when water is supplied for domestic purposes to any building occupied solely for the purposes of trade, profession, or business calling, and not incurring the payment of the inhabited house duty, the same 5% rate shall be charged; but when the rateable value exceeds £300 a year a rebate may be made of not less than 20% and not more than 30%. Under these circumstances experience has proved that the owners of these properties pay for water they do not use and could under no circumstances ever use. This is most unfair.

It is needless to state that the objects of the formation of the Water Board were those of simplicity and economy, and it is equally needless to add that from the experience gained these desiderata have not been attained. The salaries attached to the single board as compared with those of the eight different companies may have been reduced to the extent of £5,000 per annum, but outside expenses have, instead of effecting a reduction of outlay, produced an increase. Whether this excess is or is not necessary does not at the present moment affect the question.

The object of the Act is, no doubt, good, and had it worked out as intended would have proved satisfactory to all concerned, because the poorer portion of our population would have been benefited in pocket whilst no unfairness would have been caused to those highly-rated dwellings of the metropolis which do not come under the inhabited house duty. The desired object has not been effected.

Until now the Board has not exercised its right of allowing a rebate of 30%, and has maintained the minimum rebate of 20%. Thus, though, of course, small householders have benefited in a large measure, city offices, theatres, and music halls have suffered an unnecessary loss, because it was never intended that the minimum rebate should be adopted until it became a matter of necessity. That the low-rated householder is a gainer is proved by the fact that on the New River section of the Metropolitan Water Board a person living in a residence rated at £40 a year saves 7s. 2d. per year. In all other districts practically the same result occurs, and thus, according to statistics, 1,000 people are benefited to one who is not, or who suffers loss.

I now come to the last-named, and will first mention the Bank of England, which employs a staff of about 1,000 non-resident employees. Sir F. Dixon-Hartland stated, at the recent meeting at the Mansion House, that whereas under the old régime their half-yearly payment to the New River Company was £83, which naturally means an annual charge of £166, their demand note from the Water Board for the last half-year was £1,573, or £3,146 per annum. These figures mean an increase of £2,980, which, in other words, is an excess of 1,792 per cent. From the payment demanded it would appear that the rateable value of the Bank of England is £74,500 per annum, and that whereas under the old régime their payment was less than ¼%, now it is 4¼%. The figures, as given by Sir F. Dixon-Hartland, are obviously under any circumstances grossly unfair, for, even if the maximum 30% rebate had been allowed, a reduction of only £375 would have been effected.

We now come to the question of theatres and music halls, taking, say, for the sake of example, the Garrick, the Gaiety, Wyndham's, and the Oxford. The average value of a London theatre may be taken at £100,000. According to Sir Charles Wyndham it may be taken to be rated at £5,000 per annum, whilst the consumption of water during that period is only 700,000 gallons. The rate payable to the Metropolitan Water Board averages £200 a year, which sum is equivalent to a charge of 5s. 6d. per 1,000 gallons. Under the old system with an average payment of 10d. per 1,000 gallons, as was customary, the payment would have been £30; therefore there has been an increase of 566% over and above what was contributed before, and this payment is made upon a commodity of life which is practically not utilised.

These figures are applicable to the adopted rebate of 20%, and even with the further rebate of 10% the saving effected is only £25, which saving is hardly worth effecting, and which then represents an increase of 450% upon the old rate.

I have endeavoured to show that under Section 9 the results achieved by the Metropolitan Water Board, although intended to be honest in themselves, have not realised expectations, and that their adoption has proved most detrimental to the financial interests of City offices, theatres, and music halls, which may be all dealt with upon the same basis.

Some alteration of the present inconsistencies with regard to the properties mentioned must be sought, and, as previously stated, the extra rebate of 10% is not sufficient.

The remedies are:—

1. The payment by meter for water actually consumed at an expense which cannot under any circumstances exceed 11d. per 1,000 gallons (see Section 16). In the majority of theatres this would result in a charge of 9½d. per 1,000 gallons, which represents an annual payment of £27 14s. 2d. instead of £200. That is to say, it would be a reduction to 14% of the present payment. The Metropolitan Water Board will probably not sanction this proposal, for they have refused it in the past and thus they are almost sure to do so in the future.

2. The charging of all residental houses over say, £200 a year a rate of 6% instead of 5% This would be contrary to the objects of the Act and in consequence would probably never be assented to; but if it were ever to become law small householders would save the same amount as they do now, and the necessary funds would be obtained to ensure an efficient service of water to London, bearing in mind the fact that though its present population is seven millions, it is steadily increasing, and will within the next thirty or forty years probably be fourteen millions. Such a reserve of funds would prove ample means for providing additional storage in the Thames Valley without incurring the additional expense of seeking water in Wales or in other distant parts of the country.

3. There thus remains only one practical and certain remedy, and that is the sinking of private wells or boreholes. There is, and always will be, a copious supply of water in the chalk beneath our feet, and it is in our power to raise it economically. The lower greensand water need not be considered, for it does not exist under London to any extent; but there are no districts in London (with the exception perhaps of part of Oxford-street and Holborn from the Circus to Farringdon Market, and a small portion of Hammersmith) where the water from the chalk would prove difficult or expensive to raise.

I now propose to discuss in detail the remedy referred to. The London Hydraulic Power Company are already provided with mains through practically all the main streets in the City, and in all districts within London where theatres and music halls are situated. The pressure of water from these mains can be distributed to all buildings at 700lb. per square inch; but it can, by mechanical means within its branches, be graduated to whatever pressure is required. This pressure ensures the extinction of fires, the raising of lifts, and the necessary power for the raising of underground water. Thus, comparatively speaking contaminated river water is rendered the means of raising pure water. Under existing circumstances water supplied by the Metropolitan Water Board is not delivered to the top storeys of high buildings at a greater pressure than 20lb. per square inch, but with the Hydraulic Company this could be increased to any desired extent, because the capabilities of the Company as to pressure are great.

The cost of sinking boreholes into the chalk, together with the necessary machinery, may, in round and average figures, be taken at £800 for either a theatre or a large City office. This is not an alarming figure, and could, in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, be paid without inconvenience out of net income, although a loan on the sinking fund principle and spread over a given number of years is equally feasible.

A thousand gallons of "Power" water will raise 4,000 gallons of ordinary water from the standing water level in the chalk to the summits of high buildings, and the charge for it is 1s. 6d. Taking Sir Charles Wyndham's figures, therefore, with an annual consumption of 700,000 gallons, the total payment to the Hydraulic Company would be about £13, a saving of £187 with the existing 20% rebate, and of £165 with a 30% rebate.

Hydraulic power, then, is—because the working parts of the machinery connected with it are extremely simple, seldom getting out of order, and lasting practically for all time—vastly superior to motive power generated by gas or oil. It is likewise noiseless—a very great advantage—and eliminates all risk of fire.

I have proved, I trust, by the above figures, that it is greatly to the advantage of owners of theatres and large City offices to free themselves of the Water Board unless the latter either reduces its charges or sanctions the adoption of meters at the legalised rate or scale. Finally, it would always be advisable to obtain professional advice in addition to the services of the borehole sinker, because the latter is not always an adept in his art; and in the case of boreholes which have been stated to be failures, those failures have often been caused by inefficient work, and still more often from a want of geological knowledge. Even if he is, as will frequently be the case, a man of integrity, wide experience, and capability, he still, as a safeguard to himself, prefers assistance with regard to the description of machinery and corroboration as to accounts. Theatrical managers and property owners could then rest assured that they would receive proper value for the money expended.

AMUSEMENTS IN INDIA.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

BOMBAY, OCT. 10.—BANDMANN'S THEATRE.—The newly organised comedy company opened here for a week with a selection from their répertoire of the newest and latest of London's successes, Lady Frederick, Mrs. Dot, The Wrong Mr. Wright, A Royal Divorce, The Little Minister, &c. Miss Florence Hamer again made a welcome reappearance in Bombay, and eclipsed all her previous triumphs; Mr. Chas. Vane made a decided success, especially as Paradine Fouldes in Lady Frederick, and was ably supported by the other members of the company. Mr. Gordon McLeod showed up brilliantly in A Royal Divorce as Napoleon, and Messrs. Douglas Vigors and Geach portrayed their different characters in a very pleasing manner. Mr. Chas. F. Cooke furnished some fine breezy acting in all his characters, and Miss Lucy Beaumont made a distinct success in all her various rôles. The whole of the plays were splendidly mounted throughout, reflecting the greatest credit on Mr. Thomas Sydney. His Snecky Hobart in The Little Minister was a realistic type of the "auld Scot," and he scored heavily in his other parts. Little Miss Dutchie Forsyth, the brilliant child actress, received quite an ovation in Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch, and will be warmly welcomed when she makes her return visit. The smaller parts were all in capable hands. Mr. Neville looked after the business arrangements in his usual able manner. The company drew crowded houses nightly, and proved conclusively that the new theatre fills a long-felt want.

"Our Navy and Our Army," under the personal direction of Mr. Alfred West, jun., has been drawing crowded houses nightly. In Calcutta over 10,000 children alone visited this show, and Bombay has not been lacking in her appreciation of it. Each night sees some new series of films displayed, the most interesting of which is the yacht racing. Many members of the Royal Bombay Yacht Club have patronised the show, and a return will be eagerly looked for. During the interval nightly Miss Blanche Vaudon has been scoring with her charming series of dances.

THE BROADWAY, NEW CROSS.

On Monday, Nov. 2, the Drama, in Four Acts, by Robert Buchanan and Harriet Jay entitled "ALONE IN LONDON."

This evergreen play is being admirably played here by an excellent company, headed by Miss Theresa Osborne, Mr. W. S. Hartford, and Mr. Percy Rhodes. Miss Osborne is well suited to the character of Annie Meadows, and acts throughout with power and sympathy; Mr. W. S. Hartford as the wealthy miller, John Biddlecombe, gives a fine performance of a fine part; Mr. Percy Rhodes as Richard Redcliffe is a suave and polished villain, and plays the part most convincingly. He is ably seconded by Mr. Frank Sutherland as Spriggins. Mr. Percy Bell repeats his well-known and most artistic assumption of Jenkinson; Miss Mary Stafford Smith is an excellent Tom Chickweed; Mr. Burnably has a competent representative in Mr. Harry McClelland; and Mr. Blundell Fenton is very good as Walter. Miss Rose Grey gives a capital delineation of Ruth Clifton; Mr. Lonnen Meadows is very amusing as Charlie Johnson; and Miss Gertie Douglas is a bright and clever Liz Jenkinson; and Miss Nellie Lauraine scores as Mrs. Maloney. Little Paul has a pleasing representative in Miss Elsie Clarke. Other characters are well sustained by Messrs. G. Yarmouth, F. B. Wayne, J. Foster, Henry Sibald, Alfred Moss, James T. Holt, E. Orme, and G. P. Greatrex; Miss Amy Stocks is a smart Susan.

CHAT WITH H. B. BRANDRETH.

We do not think we should be far wrong in asserting that there is no single profession or business which calls for such a variety of qualifications as the theatre manager must possess. First and foremost he must be a business man—and a good business man at that. Then he must be tactful in speech and action, for the people he has to deal with require very careful handling. He must be, too, a quick judge of public likes and dislikes, and be able to tell, almost instinctively, the varied and fickle movements of the pulse of the playgoers. Our manager must be thoroughly conversant with the intricacies of stage-craft, in order to regulate every detail connected with the production of a play or the appearance of a performer. And to these capabilities must be added the very necessary "eye" of discipline. There is a large staff to control, every member of which has assigned to him a certain work, and even in the nature of that work the manager should be in some degree versed.

That for Mr. Henry Barrett Brandreth, the manager of the Kennington Theatre, these virtues can be claimed we have not the slightest doubt. He combines in himself the good commercial qualities of a first-class business man with that social agreeableness which goes so far—especially in the theatrical world—to carry one's point and to create a feeling of satisfaction, and even confidence, in the minds of other people. The history of Mr. Brandreth's early and even more recent career gives ample evidence of that steadiness of character and culture which invariably culminates in the successful man. Some people might say that he has been fortunate, and perhaps he himself thinks so. But success is not gained in these days by merely sitting on a milestone and hugging a tom-cat; it involves a long, strenuous mental and physical struggle—sometimes lessened, it is true, by the character of the particular employment—that only the fittest, and they who keep themselves fit, can hope to overcome. Although Mr. Brandreth feels that he has always done what he considered in a broad sense to be his duty, he is modest enough, in the analysis of his advancement, to place in the background his own personal efforts before the many kindnesses and help he has received at the hands of various people prominently associated with theatrical affairs.

Mr. Brandreth was born in June, 1870, and therefore has not yet passed that line which separates modern youth from middle age. "I appeared," he told us the other day, "at the Cremorne Gardens at the age of three with my father, under the stage management of Mr. King. Later I was educated in part at Radcliffe College, near Leicester. Contemporary with me there were Mr. Richard Horgan, and later Mr. Seymour Hicks. I left this college at the age of twelve and toured the Continent with Joseph and Alfred Hamilton's panorama for some three and a half years. After studying at the college of Montlerz, near Paris, and returning to England in 1885, I was articled to a firm of solicitors. The life not suiting me, I answered an advertisement for a baritone to join a minstrel company at Scarborough in the Christmas of 1888. Almost immediately I received a wire asking me to join at once. I raised the money secretly for my fare, and throwing my legal career to the winds, made straight for Scarborough, with the result that I received at the end of my first week's engagement the magnificent sum of one and fourpence, to include my salary and fares, when the company broke up! During my route back I had ample time to reflect upon the advantages of the profession I had joined. Subsequently, however, I procured an engagement with Mr. William Greet's La Cigale company, later playing Louchard in Madame Angot and the Sergeant in The Daughter of the Regiment. I played at the Trafalgar-square Theatre in The Wedding Eve and Dorothy, and was then engaged by Mr. D'Oyly Carte for one of his touring companies, remaining nearly four years under that gentleman's management. On leaving him I came to London and was engaged by Mr. Alexander Loftus to play in the cast of The New Barmaid, subsequently appearing in the principal baritone part in the piece on tour. I created the character of Colavitch in Black and White, and then joined Mr. Tom B. Davis's company at the Lyric in Little Miss Nobody, Cupid and the Princess, and Florodora. I organised several companies of Florodora on tour for Mr. Ben Greet, Mr. Bannister Howard, and Mr. Wentworth Croke. I was subsequently appointed to take over the entire direction of the Bouffes Parisienne, Paris; and after managing several companies, I again returned to the boards, playing the Brigand chief in The Medal and the Maid. From this I rejoined Mr. William Greet's forces, stage-managing The Earl and the Girl, as well as playing the rôle Bunker Bliss. In 1904 I was for a short time attached to Mme. Sarah Bernhardt's company, and three years ago accepted Mr. Robert Arthur's offer to manage his Kennington Theatre."

We find the following anecdote in Pelham's "Chronicles of Crime":—"A gentleman, much dejected in his looks, called one day on Ross, when stricken with years, and told him that his father, a wealthy citizen in London, lay at the point of death, and begged that he might see him, or he would not die in peace of mind. Curious as this request appeared from a stranger, and in such extremity, the actor hesitated; but being much pressed by his visitor, he agreed to accompany him. Arrived at the house of the sick man, Mr. Ross was announced and soon admitted; but observing the family to retire, and being left alone with the patient, his wonder was again aroused. The dying penitent, now three score years and ten, casting his languid eyes upon Ross, said, "Can it be you who raised my fortune—who saved my life? Then were you young like myself—ay, and amiable, amid the direst misfortunes." Here nature, in a struggle with death, became overpowered; and as the sick man's head fell upon his pillow, he faintly ejaculated, "O, Barnwell! Barnwell!" We may conceive the astonishment of the player, whom age had long incapacitated from representing the unfortunate London apprentice. The feeble man, renewing his efforts to gratify a dying desire, again opened his eyes and continued: Mr. Ross, some forty years ago, like George Barnwell, I wronged my master to supply the unbounded extravagance of a Millwood. I took her to see your performance, which so shocked me that I silently vowed to break the connection then by my side, and return to the path of virtue. I kept my resolution, and replaced the money I had stolen before my villainy was detected. I bore up against the upbraidings of my deluder, and found a Maria in my master's daughter. We married. I soon succeeded to my master's business, and the young man who brought you here was the first pledge of our love. I have more children, or I would have shown my gratitude by a larger sum than I have bequeathed you; but take a thousand pounds affixed to your name." At the dying man's signal, old Ross left the room overwhelmed by his feelings.

CHILDREN ON THE STAGE. The Act affecting the employment of children on the stage came into force on Saturday, Oct. 1, 1904. Managers, agents, entrepreneurs, and performers wishing to possess a copy of the complete Act in a concise form can do so by forwarding three stamps to the Publisher, The Era Offices, 5, Tavistock-street, Strand, W.C.

A COPY OF "THE ERA" will be forwarded to any address in the United Kingdom for six stamps.

THE NEW GERMAN CONTRACT.

(FROM A SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

After several years' discussion, debate, and conference the two great bodies governing, and most immediately interested in German theatrical matters have at length agreed upon a uniform contract, which, consequently, will come into force on and after Jan. 31, 1909. Much annoying and costly litigation will be obviated by the adoption of this contract, which is the joint production of the German Actors' Association (founded in 1871 and numbering some 6,500 members) and the Union of Theatrical Managers (Deutscher Bühnen Verein), which is representative of all the important German stages. The greater part of the work in drafting and framing the new instrument was done by Baron Putlitz, of Stuttgart, and Privy Councillors von Barnay, Felisch and Hoppe.

The regulations which henceforth will govern all contracts, and which in all probability will do away with the necessity for fresh legislation as regards actors and theatres, are sub-divided under five general headings, comprising twenty-two clauses:—

I.—GENERAL REGULATIONS.

1.—YEAR OF CONTRACT.

The year of contract comprises a period of 365 days—in leap year 366 days. If a stage contract is made for a shorter period, the same regulations apply as for the entire year. In any contract for longer than one year the first 365 (or 366) days are to be counted as a year. The days for preliminary rehearsals are always to be included as part of the year of contract. Time of playing, or season, is the period during which a member has to fulfil his duties, deducting the time of the stipulated furlough. If the season is shorter than eight months, the contract has to be regarded as a season's contract, and not as a yearly contract. If such contract be made for more seasons than one the minimum duration of each season has to be stated, and the date of commencing the following season has to be notified to each member on every first of February.

2.—NOTICES.

Notice is only counted as duly given if it reaches the other party before the expiry of the proper period. Should an unforeseen delay occur in the delivery of a notice which was despatched in good time the sender must be immediately notified, otherwise the notice will be counted as duly served.

3.—LOCAL PROVISOS.

Any contract made with a subventioned State theatre does not come into force if the ruler of the State or his representative should refuse to sanction the ratification of the contract. The management must notify such refusal to the member immediately on its receipt.

II.—RATIFICATION OF THE CONTRACT.

4.—ENGAGEMENTS, &c.

1. If the ratification of a contract is made dependent on several performances as "guest," these should be so arranged that two such "guest" evenings take place within three days, and three such performances within five days.

2. Within ten days of the last "guest" evening the management may notify the actor in writing that the contract will not be ratified. The same applies if a "guest" performance cannot be arranged within a stipulated period.

3. If such performance does not take place owing to the fault of the actor, the management has the right to enforce the contract, retaining a right of giving notice, conjointly with an executive appointed for the purpose. (See IV. 15.)

4. If such performance does not take place owing to the fault of the management the latter has to pay the actor a fine amounting to the aggregate maximum salary arranged for such "guest" nights, which annuls the contract.

5. If neither party is at fault for such performance not taking place, the management is at liberty to rescind the contract within fourteen days. If such notice is not given the contract comes into force.

5.—LICENCES.

If the management does not obtain its licence at the latest four months before the opening day, notice of the state of affairs must be given to the President of the Actors' Association, and the management must deposit, if required, two months' salary with the local police authorities. In default, the actor may rescind the contract by giving notice per registered letter. The deposit is to be regarded as security for the payment of any damages on the part of the management.

6.—DURATION OF CONTRACT.

Every contract must be made for a definitely expressed period. All qualifying adjectives are inadmissible. If the actor is obliged to take part in preliminary rehearsals, the contract dates from the day on which such obligations commence.

7.—PRELIMINARY REHEARSALS.

1. The actor receives for each of the first five days of preliminary rehearsals one quarter, for every subsequent day of rehearsal one half of his salary as computed per diem. The actual salary is counted from the day of the first performance.

2. The previous paragraph is null and void if the actor is in receipt of a retaining fee.

III.—RIGHTS AND OBLIGATIONS.

8.—SCOPE AND NATURE OF EMPLOYMENT.

The actor is under obligation to take part in all rehearsals and performances, ballets, prologues, concerts, living pictures, or other artistic representations if ordered by the management. The management has free disposal of the actor's occupation provided it be within that branch for which he has been engaged. The list of parts handed in by the actor must only contain such parts as he has already played in or has thoroughly studied. If the actor is not given suitable employment from motives of malice he can, a month after having applied for a suitable part, rescind the contract. The same in case he is not given anything to do for three months.

9.—SALARY, BENEFITS, PENSIONS.

All monthly salaries must be paid at the latest on the second day of the following month; in the case of yearly contracts they are payable quarterly. In the case of two performances in one day, unless special proviso is made, one half of the salary as computed per diem has to be added. Deductions in cases of a benefit, unless previously agreed upon, are inadmissable. Pensions are only granted where specially mentioned in the contract.

10.—COSTUMES.

Every member must find his own modern dress, gloves, footwear, tights, and underwear, unless uniformity is required. Wigs, paint, &c., to be provided by the actor at his or her own expense. Historical costumes are furnished by the management.

11.—ACTING ON TOUR.

All fares and luggage to be paid for by the management. The journey is counted as completed with the arrival of the conveyance. Where no travelling expenses are specified the amount of salary as computed per diem is reckoned as basis for daily expenses. On tours lasting longer than three days salaries must be advanced on demand up to the day of departure.

12.—FURLOUGH.

If the actor is granted furlough between May 1 and Sept. 15, without salary, notice must be given four weeks in advance. If the actor is under notice he can demand a furlough of five consecutive days for obtaining another engagement. No member is allowed to take part in any performance outside his own theatre other than sanctioned expressly by the management. This restriction does not apply to private theatricals.

13.—ILLNESS, INDISPOSITION, &c.

In cases of indisposition or illness notice must be given to the management immediately, and a medical certificate forwarded within twenty-four hours. In every case of illness the member must submit, if requested, to the medical examination of the management's confidential doctor. If a member is absent through illness for a period not exceeding fourteen days he is entitled to his full salary; in cases of protracted illness a sliding scale is provided.

IV.—TERMINATION OF THE CONTRACT.

14.—CLOSURE OF THEATRE.

(a) If the theatre be destroyed by fire or through some other catastrophe, or if in case of war, political disturbance, or other events the theatre be closed for an indefinite period, the management is entitled to annul the contract without notice.

(b) If the theatre be closed officially on account of national or Court mourning or on account of structural alterations for a period of not more than three days the management must pay full salaries.

(c) If, however, the period of closure exceeds three days, the salaries paid on and after the fourth day are reduced to one-third.

(d) If the official closure of a theatre exceeds the period of one week the management, except as specified above under (a), may terminate the contract after giving a week's notice within three days and paying one-third of the salaries.

(e) If the theatre be closed by the management and not by the official authorities on account of war, political disturbances, epidemics, &c., a week's notice must be accompanied by full payment of all moneys due.

15.—NOTICES.

All notices must be given in writing. In exceptional cases a committee composed equally of representatives of both parties may issue a notice within the first three weeks of an engagement. This committee has power to adjudicate between the management and the actor. In cases of contracts extending over three or five years, the management has the right to give notice after the expiry of the second and third year, but not later than on Jan. 16. No such proviso must be made in the case of re-engagements after the third year.

16.—MARRIAGE OF ACTRESSES.

If an actress wishes to marry she must notify the management at least one month prior to the day of the wedding. By undertaking not to appear professionally elsewhere she is then entitled to terminate the contract. Similarly, the management has the right to give notice, on payment of all moneys due up to the day of the wedding. If the marriage takes place surreptitiously the management may give a week's notice. Should the married actress wish to return to the stage, she must first offer her services to her former management under pain of heavy fines; should her offer be declined she is then at liberty to take an engagement elsewhere.

17.—ANNULLING THE CONTRACT.

The principal causes which entitle the actor to rescind the contract are non-payment of salaries within three days of falling due, being incapacitated through illness, and any proved dishonourable act on the part of the management. The latter may annul the contract if the actor spoils the performance through not being word perfect or similar causes, if the actor repeatedly refuses to follow out instructions, if he contravenes the bye-laws, if he spreads defamatory rumours, if he shirks his duty by shamming sickness, if proved guilty of a dishonourable action, if affected with chronic disease, or if he made any false declaration as to age or name on signing the contract.

18.—ACCIDENTS.

If through no fault of the management the memory, hearing, or sight of the actor are impaired, the former may give two months' notice. Where such accidents are due to culpable negligence on the part of the management, however, the actor is entitled to his full salary during the term of his contract, without prejudice to any subsequent claim for damages.

19.—BREACH OF CONTRACT.

The actor is guilty of a breach of contract if he does not arrive punctually on the appointed day, or exceeds his furlough or travels without leave of absence; if by his behaviour he intentionally makes himself objectionable; if after the conclusion or during the term of his engagement he appears without the management's permission in the same town or within a radius of 15 kilometres. If the management dismisses a member for breach of contract and the subsequent lawsuit results in favour of the actor he may be indemnified up to the amount of the fine stipulated in the contract, in addition to salary and other moneys due.

The management is guilty of a breach of contract by dismissing a member without legal justification, by making the actor's existence unbearable, or by any wilfully misleading statement as to concession or licence of the theatre. If the management is found guilty of a breach of contract, the payment of the stipulated fine annuls such contract.

V.—SPECIAL REGULATIONS.

20.—TRANSFER OF SERVICES.

Transfer of the rights embodied in the contract can take place under certain circumstances. In the case of the death of the manager the actor has the right to give notice for the end of the current season within two weeks of learning the news of such death. The legal successor has the same rights within two weeks of assuming office, but only so far as giving notice to the entire company—not any one individual—is concerned.

21.—FINES.

Fines, not exceeding in any single case the amount of one month's salary, nor throughout the year or season two months' salary, may be imposed and deducted by the management. The actor has the right to appeal to the Actors' Court of Arbitration or to the Civil Courts. The managemen has to pay all such sums towards the philanthropic institutions connected with the stage.

22.—SUBSCRIPTIONS.

All members of the Actors' Association or the Artists' Home (Künstlerheim) are obliged to pay their subscriptions monthly, and the managements are obliged to deduct such sums from the monthly payments and to remit them to the Associations mentioned.

THE Gentleman's Magazine, Tuesday, Feb. 6, 1739, says: "At Covent Garden Theatre one John Somerford tumbled from the upper gallery into the pit, being ten yards, without receiving any hurt. When the play was over, he told Mr. Rich that he had made himself free of the gallery, and hoped he should have the liberty of going into it when he pleased. To which Mr. Rich consented, provided he never again came out of it in the same abrupt manner."

WHEN some one was lamenting Foote's unlucky fate in being kicked in Dublin, Johnson said he was glad of it. "He is rising in the world," added he; "when he was in England, no one thought him worth kicking."

THEATRICAL GOSSIP.

Sir Charles Wyndham has secured a success well in keeping with the title, and Bellamy the Magnificent seems likely to stay at the New until Mr. and Mrs. Fred Terry take up their tenancy at Christmas. In order to meet the demands to witness Sir Charles's superb performance a Wednesday matinée has been put on in addition to the usual Saturday afternoon performance. Meanwhile, Mr. Robert Loraine having gone to the Haymarket, his part of Stevens in Bellamy is being played by Mr. Edmund Maurice.

Mr. Beerbohm Tree is adding appreciably to his theatrical activities by housing at His Majesty's a new institution, to be known as the Afternoon Theatre, at which plays by modern English dramatists and foreign masterpieces will be produced. Tuesday, Thursday, and Friday afternoons will be devoted to the productions, which will be mounted with the liberality that distinguishes everything that Mr. Tree takes in hand. The enterprise will be inaugurated on Tuesday, Dec. 8, with the production of Hauptman's Hannele, to be repeated on the following Thursday and Friday. Hannele, in the original, was included in the programme of the German season at the Royalty in the early part of 1904, and a very workmanlike adaptation into English by Mr. William Archer was presented by the Play Actors at the Scala last April.

Mr. George Alexander will be welcomed back to the metropolis on Wednesday, when he will produce at the St. James's Mr. Alfred Sutro's new play The Builder of Bridges. Mr. Alexander, in the principal part, will have sterling assistance from Miss Irene Vanbrugh, Mr. Dawson Milward, Mr. Harcourt Williams, Mr. William Farren, Mr. E. Vivian Reynolds, Miss Florence Haydon, Miss Barbara Hannay, and Miss Dora Sevening.

Mr. Martin Harvey's revival of The Only Way at the Adelphi, as we predicted, is filling the theatre at every performance, two extra rows of stalls having had to be added. On Saturday the curtain had to be raised no less than fifty-four times, and at the end of the performance Mr. Harvey had to respond with a short speech of thanks.

Mr. Harvey's plans for the immediate future are pregnant with interest, including as they do the production of two new plays adapted from the Spanish. The first of these, at present entitled The World and His Wife, which Mr. William Faversham has produced in America with extraordinary success, is an adaptation of Echegaray's El Gran Galeoto, and will be staged by Mr. Harvey at the Theatre Royal, Birmingham, during the week of Dec. 7. The second novelty is entitled Marta of the Lowlands, adapted from the Spanish Tierra Baja by Angel Guimera, and will be produced by Mr. Harvey in the course of next year.

Preparations for the command performance of The Corsican Brothers at Windsor are keeping the carpenters, scene painters, &c., busy at the Adelphi, for the scenery and properties used at that theatre were found to be too large for the Royal Stage at Windsor Castle. The King, however, expressed so great a desire to see the play there that extensive alterations are being carried out so that the King and his Royal guests, the King and Queen of Sweden, may not be disappointed. Mr. Harvey, it may be added, has strengthened the cast by the engagement of Miss Maud Hoffman and Mr. William Haviland, who will play Emelie de Lesparre and Chateau Renaud respectively.

Miss Lena Ashwell, whose divorce from Mr. Arthur Playfair, granted, on her petition, six months ago, was made absolute last week, was married on Saturday morning to Dr. Henry J. F. Simson, of 36, Grosvenor-street, W. The ceremony was quite private, only two friends being in the secret. Dr. Simson is the eldest son of Mr. Robert Simson, of the Bengal Civil Service, and was formerly at the Hospital for Sick Children, Great Ormond-street. He took his M.B. degree in Edinburgh in 1895, was made a Fellow of the Royal College of Surgeons, Edinburgh, in 1899, and a M.R.C.P. of London in 1901. Mr. and Mrs. Simson went to Dover on Sunday morning, and returned to town the following day in time for the popular actress to take up her part in The Sway Boat at the Kingsway.

Miss Ashwell, on her return from her very brief honeymoon, comprising about thirty hours at Dover, entertained the Kingsway company and staff at a wedding supper on Monday at midnight at the Piccadilly Hotel. Her two sisters, her brother (Mr. Roger Pocock, founder of the Legion of Frontiersmen), and one or two medical friends of Dr. Simson's were present. The health of the happy pair was the onl ytoast given, and this, it is almost needless to state, was received with enthusiasm.

A sitting for public examination was held on Wednesday in the case of Mr. William Bailey, the lessee of the West London Theatre. The liabilities were returned at £5,940, of which £855 was expected to rank, against assets estimated to produce a surplus of £1,240. Mr. Bailey attributed his failure to competition, to general depression in trade, and to falling-off in takings, due to the removal of costermongers' stalls from Edgware-road to Church-street, and to the depopulation of the neighbourhood by the construction of the Great Central Railway, but more particularly to pressure by one of the mortgagees. The examination was concluded.

Mr. J. B. Mulholland, who attended the meeting at the Mansion House called by the Lord Mayor last week to protest against the charges of the new Water Board, was appointed, in conjunction with Mr. Tree, to represent the Theatrical Managers' Association. He explained to the meeting that Mr. Tree was unavoidably absent because of the matinée on that day at His Majesty's, and also referred to Mr. Edward Terry, who, as a ratepayer in, and a Freeman of, the City, as well as a theatre proprietor, would have been present, but for the fact that he was playing in the North. Mr. Mulholland also represented the Theatres' Alliance, of which active body he is president.

At one time the fight against the excessive water charges by the new authority was maintained almost wholly by the Alliance, but as a result of the strong attitude consistently maintained by that body, the theatres now show a united front. How often has The Era advocated combination for such a purpose! But necessity is the mother of—unity.

Mr. William Farren, sen., who died on Sept. 25, left estate of the gross value of £4,922, of which the net personalty has been sworn at £3,522. Probate of his will has been granted to his daughter by his first marriage, Miss Florence Helen Farren, of The Mount, Inchbrook, Stroud, Gloucestershire, to whom he left the whole of his property absolutely.

Mr. Henry R. Smith has finally fixed upon the evening of Saturday, the 28th inst., for his opening of the Waldorf with The Antelope, the new musical play by Mr. Adrian Ross and Dr. Hugo Felix. The cast will include Mr. Fred Wright, jun., Mr. J. Farren Soutar, Mr. Fred Emney, Mr. Aubrey FitzGerald, Miss Kitty Gordon, Miss Maudie Thornton, Miss José Collins, Miss Stewart, and Mr. J. Brabourne.

Mr. Cyril Maude commissioned Mr. Bruce Smith to paint new scenery for the command performance of The Flag Lieutenant that is to be given by Mr. Maude at Sandringham. In order to fit the Sandringham stage all the scenery has been made 6ft. smaller everywhere than the original, and some of it is about half the original size. The special scenery has been delivered at the Playhouse, and on Tuesday it will be sent to Sandringham, with the stage carpenter and two men, and Mr. John Harwood, the stage-manager, will also go down to superintend its arrangement. On the morning of the performance all the property men and scene shifters will leave St. Pancras at 7.20 in order to have plenty of time to get things straight. The company, including Mr. Cyril Maude and Miss Winifred Emery, will leave St. Pancras at 12.20 on Friday, the 13th inst. Lunch will be served on the train, and they will dine at Sandringham about seven o'clock in the evening. At ten o'clock the curtain will rise on The Flag Lieutenant, and the performance will finish about midnight. The company will then have supper, and will travel back to St. Pancras during the night, arriving in London at six o'clock on Saturday morning. Both the matinée and the evening performance will be given the same day at the Playhouse as usual. The total number of people whom Mr. Turner takes to Sandringham for the performance will be between sixty and seventy. The ladies of the company will have entirely new costumes for the command performance. These costumes will be seen in London on the 200th performance of the play.

Mr. Willie Clarkson has returned from Cambo les Bains, where he has been submitting dresses to M. Edmund Rostand for the much-postponed play Chanticleer, in which M. Coquelin is to play the principal part, that of Coq Gallic, and all the characters are to represent birds and beasts. M. and Mme. Rostand were extremely pleased with the dresses, and one of Mr. Clarkson's men was dressed in the bird costume and walked round the grounds, in order that the effect in different attitudes could be noted. The play is due early in the New Year at the Théâtre Porte St. Martin.

Miss Evelyn Millard will commemorate her first season of management and the hundredth performance of Idols by presenting every visitor to the Garrick Theatre on Monday, Nov. 30, with an artistic souvenir. The theatre was on Tuesday honoured by the presence of Queen Alexandra, the Queen of Norway, Princess Victoria of Wales, and the Grand Duke Michael Alexandrovitch.

The leaders of the dramatic profession are interesting themselves enthusiastically in the movement to associate the British stage with the memorial to Adelaide Ristori, and a programme unique in its proportions is assured for the matinée organised by Mr. H. Beerbohm Tree at His Majesty's Theatre for Nov. 30. Among the celebrated artists who have promised to perform are Miss Lena Ashwell, Miss Lily Brayton, Miss Gertrude Elliott, Miss Winifred Emery, Miss Evelyn Millard, Mrs. Tree, Miss Viola Tree, Miss Marie Tempest, Miss Irene Vanbrugh, Miss Geneviève Ward, Mr. George Alexander, Mr. Oscar Asche, Mr. Dion Boucicault, Mr. Lionel Brough, Mr. Ben Davies, Mr. Charles Glenney, Mr. Martin Harvey, Mr. H. B. Irving, Mr. Cyril Maude, Mr. Forbes Robertson, Sir Charles Santley, Mr. H. Beerbohm Tree, and Mr. Hermann Vezin.

Signor Salvini, the famous tragedian, was invited to be present at the Ristori matinée arranged by Mr. H. Beerbohm Tree at His Majesty's Theatre for Monday, Nov. 30, and replied in the following terms:—"I am very much indebted to you for not having forgotten me in your memory, and for the honour which the committee for the Ristori matinée wish to bestow on me at the memorable matinée for the benefit of the monument to be erected to the memory of such a great and never-to-be-forgotten artist. I have done, and should like to continue to do, everything to pay homage to my most beloved friend Adelaide Ristori, and should have loved to accept your invitation to be on the stage of His Majesty's Theatre the day that such tribute is paid by the foremost English artists; but, alas! such a great wish cannot be fulfilled, as I am practically an invalid, and the doctor will never allow me to undertake such a journey in my eighty years. It is with the greatest sorrow I am compelled to renounce the pleasure to satisfy our common wish, but if I am not present personally, I shall certainly be there with my heart and soul.—Tommaso Salvini."

Mr. Lewis Waller has made a very interesting engagement in that of Miss Fay Davis for the part of Chorus in Henry V., which he will revive at the Lyric after the termination of the run of The Duke's Motto. Another noteworthy selection made by Mr. Waller is that of Mr. Louis Calvert for the parts of Pistol in Henry V. and Falstaff in Henry IV.

Mr. Seymour Hicks, the ranks of whose companies have suffered severely from the onslaughts of Cupid, has made a tempting offer to the maidens of merry England. To the twelve prettiest girls selected by the readers of the Express he has offered engagements to appear in his company, provided, of course, that they have the requisite vocal accomplishments.

Mr. George Edwardes has made an offer founded on a similar principle, and gives a guarantee to engage for his next production at the Gaiety a given number of young ladies who shall be decided by the readers of the Daily Mirror to possess the appearance and gifts necessary to secure them positions in the chorus at the Gaiety. Mr. Edwardes confesses himself, however, a sceptic in the matter. "Through my auditions at the Gaiety, and by the exhaustive tests which my lieutenants have made for me," he says, "the percentage of really clever clever girls we have discovered is woefully small. Still, I am ready to be convinced that talent may be found in other ways, through wider channels, and I challenge the Daily Mirror to find these talented ladies for me."

Mr. Charles Frohman, who returned from America a few days ago, leaves for Paris to-day to make the acquaintance of Henry Bernstein's new play Israel, recently produced at the Réjane Theatre. During Mr. Frohman's brief stay in London he disclosed some new projects, the most interesting of which is his arrangement with Mr. Seymour Hicks, by virtue of which his accomplished wife, Miss Ellaline Terriss, will reappear in London at the head of her own company in a play to be produced by Mr. Hicks. The actual character of the work is not yet decided upon.

Mr. Frohman expresses a keen personal satisfaction at being able to place Miss Terriss in a position to which, as he says, "the refined and imaginative quality of her work more than entitle her, and which every member of the playgoing public will acknowledge she has won by right of conquest. The delicacy and tenderness of her art are of the kind that appeal directly to women and children, but it is even upon broader grounds that I claim for her the right to fill the position which I am glad to have been instrumental in securing for her."

"A March Hare," a comedy by Mr. Harold Smith, was produced, for copyright purposes, on Saturday last, at the New Theatre Royal, Birkenhead.

Miss Emma Hutchison and Mr. Percy Hutchison, who have been conspicuous this autumn by having so many successes in the provinces and the suburbs, presented Lady Frederick on Monday last at the Prince's, Manchester, where Mr. Somerset Maugham's play has succeeded in creating much interest on this its first visit to the cotton centre. The Hutchison management have brought themselves to the front rank by their unfailing attention to every detail regarding the productions under their control. Every play being sent out of London is personally rehearsed by Mr. Percy Hutchison, who for many years was stage-manager and producer for Sir Charles Wyndham. The title-rôle in Lady Frederick is played by Miss Mabel Love, who is supported by Mr. Robert Minster and a strong London cast.

Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Asche (Miss Lily Brayton), who are this week appearing at the Borough Theatre, Stratford, go to Australia next May for a six months' tour, under the management of Messrs. Meynell and Gunn. Their first production at the Antipodes will be the new play which Mr. Norreys Connell, in conjunction with Mr. Asche himself, has adapted from Mr. Stanley Weyman's popular novel "Count Hannibal." A company of twenty-five people and the accessories for six different productions will be travelled.

It is agreeable to learn that Rugby is at length to have a first-class theatre, built on up-to-date lines, and run by the well-known management of Mr. Wentworth Croke, who has purchased the site for a new Opera House. The theatre will be situated in the heart of the town, and will have a double frontage. The plans have been approved by the Urban District Council, and a provisional licence has been granted by the magistrates on the completion of the building.

The theatre will consist of pit, stalls, dress circle, gallery, and ten private boxes, and will be capable of seating one thousand persons. The proscenium opening will be 26ft. square, and the stage will afford accommodation for first-class touring companies. Fifteen dressing-rooms will be provided, in a separate block at the back of the stage. Arrangements have been made by which the pit and stalls floor may be raised level with the stage, in order to afford facilities for fancy dress or Hunt balls. With Mr. Wentworth Croke at the head of affairs, the patrons of the new Rugby Opera House can rest assured that they will be catered for in a style equal to any theatre in the provinces.

The "standard contract," which the Actors' Association sought some time ago to establish between manager and actor, is, it seems, not yet to become un fait accompli. In a letter from the West-end Managers' Association, which the council of the Actors' Association at their meeting on Tuesday ordered to be made known to the members, it is stated that managers "do not feel that they are in a position to discuss the matter."

On the invitation of the clerk to the County Council, the Association is sending a deputation to the general sub-committee of the Public Control Committee on Friday, Nov. 20, with regard to the matter of the registration of theatrical employment agencies. The deputation will consist of Mr. Cecil Raleigh, Mr. Franklyn Walford, Miss Marion Lind, Miss Lucy Sibley, and Mr. John H. Mote, the hon. solicitor, with Mr. Raleigh as spokesman.

"The Boatswain's Mate" was the one-act piece (by W. W. Jacobs and H. C. Sargent) revived at Wyndham's Theatre on Saturday in front of The Early Worm, and caused abundant mirth. The three parts are acted with a keen sense of humour by Miss Evelyn Vaudray as the buxom widow and by Mr. Cecil Burt and Mr. J. A. Bentham as the conspirators whose schemes are so ruthlessly overthrown.

A new number has been added by Mr. Tom B. Davis to The Belle of Brittany entitled "I am not a lady's maid." The song, which is sung by Miss Maudi Darrell in the first act, has been composed by Mr. Howard Talbot and written by Mr. Percy Greenbank. As a remarkable instance of advance booking it may be added that every reserved seat at the Queen's Theatre has already been sold for Boxing Night.

The "At Homes" which have hitherto been held on Thursday evenings at the Grenfell Club will, by special request, in future be held on Friday evenings.

After the performance of Are You a Mason? at the Crystal Palace Theatre on the evening of the 30th ult., a presentation was made to Mr. E. H. Paterson, who on Monday was installed as Worshipful Master of the Asaph Lodge of Freemasons. The presentation, which was made on behalf of the other members of the company by Miss Adelaide Grace, took the form of the "clothing" appertaining to the office of Worshipful Master.

"The Builders," the new play by Norah Keith, which will be produced at a special matinée at the Criterion on Tuesday, will be acted by Mr. C. Aubrey Smith, Mr. A. E. George, Miss Evelyn D'Alroy, Miss Maude Millett, Miss Vane Featherstone, Mrs. H. Nye Chart, Miss Ierne Fitzgerald, Mr. Heath Haviland, and Miss Haviland. The play will be produced by Mr. Charles Rock, who officiates by permission of Miss Millard.

Miss N. de Silva, Miss Mary Rorke, and Mr. Henry Ainley, in A Tragedy of Truth, will be included in the programme of the benefit matinée to be given for Miss Dolores Drummond at the Playhouse on Nov. 20. The little piece is by Rosamund Langbridge, and was received with enthusiasm at the Adelphi last month. Mr. Norman O'Neill, the composer of the incidental music, has kindly consented to conduct the orchestra.

All records of Mr. George Edwardes's Merry Widow company on tour were beaten last week at the Theatre Royal, Nottingham. Upwards of 16,000 people saw the comedy, hundreds being turned away each night, and the enthusiasm was unprecedented. A large staff of policemen was necessary each night to regulate the enormous queues.

Miss Georgie Corlass has been engaged to play Miss Ada Reeve's part in Butterflies on tour during Miss Reeve's absence for pantomime.

Mr. Eardley Turner embarked yesterday on his second trip to Australia, where he is specially engaged by Mr. J. C. Williamson. Mr. Turner's work out there four years ago—when he was principal comedian with Mr. Beerbohm Tree's répertoire company, proved much to the liking of Australian playgoers, and his success under Mr. Williamson's management seems equally certain.

Poole's Opera House, Treherbert, assisted by Messrs. Frank Brunel, William Bailey, and Charles Clifford, of Home, Sweet Home company, beat Treherbert Association Football Club by four goals to two on Saturday. Goals for the winners were scored by A. Kento, D. Duncan, F. Brunel, and Charles Clifford. The game was a most exciting one from start to finish. The Opera House team consisted of W. Brooks (goal), D. Coutts, F. Horsfell, W. Bailey (backs), F. Brunel, T. Morgan (half-backs), F. Kinton, Charles Clifford (right wing), Walt Nation (centre), A. Kento, and D. Duncan (left wing).

Miss Alma Murray, who has not, we think, been seen on the London stage for the last eighteen months, has been warmly welcomed back by her admirers at the Aldwych Theatre in Mr. Jerome K. Jerome's comedy, Fanny and the Servant Problem. The amount of life, incisiveness, and firm artistic style with which she manages to invest the small part of Jane Bennet is, indeed, wonderful, yet not surprising, when it is recalled that from childhood she has appeared in a variety of parts in pantomime, farce, drama, comedy, and tragedy. Among Miss Murray's specially great successes may be mentioned: Jessica, Portia, Julie de Mortemar, Annette, Daisy, Ruby—all with Sir Henry Irving—Sophia, Clara Douglas, Grace Harkaway, Kate Hardcastle, Juliet, Phœbe, Celia, Rosalind, Titania, Raina (Arms and the Man), and Rachel (Held by the Enemy). That London playgoers never forget their favourites has been amply proved by the greeting extended by Press and public to Miss Murray.

During the season of opera in English at Covent Garden, lasting for four weeks after Jan. 16, three complete cycles of The Ring of the Niblungs and The Mastersingers of Nuremberg will be given, conducted by Dr. Hans Richter. The works will be carried out in their entirety, and under the same conditions as are usual in the summer season, excepting that the performances will begin later, and that there will be no long interval after the first act.

The répertoire will include an entirely new opera by Dr. E. W. Naylor (libretto by C. Thornely), which gained the £500 prize offered by Messrs. Ricordi for the best opera by a British composer. It is also proposed to produce Madame Butterfly and Gounod's Faust. Among the artists already engaged are Mesdames Marie Alexander, Edith Clegg, Florence Easton, Rachel Green, Caroline Hatchard, Dilys Jones, and Gladys Roberts, and Messrs. Frederic Austin, Hans Bechstein, D. Bindon-Ayres, Albert Garcia, and Peter Cornelius. The chorus will consist entirely of English singers, and the orchestra will be made up of English instrumentalists.

The entire production of Le Grand Soir, which is reviewed in another column, is to be transferred from Terry's Theatre to the Court on Nov. 9, by Miss Andrews, the manageress of the Paris house. Only a flying visit can be paid, as Miss Andrews requires her company back in Paris.

Queen Alexandra, the Queen of Norway, Princess Victoria, and the Grand Duke Michael Alexandrovitch witnessed Mr. H. B. Irving's performance of Lesurques and Dubosc in The Lyons Mail at the Shaftesbury Theatre on Wednesday evening.

"Are You the Man?" is the title of Mr. Frank Price's new play, which Mr. Alfred Northway and Mr. W. V. Garrod will produce next year. Romance and mystery are blended in the new piece, and the introduction of a military element will give scope for the display of picturesque uniforms. A Country Girl in London, by the same author, is the greatest success yet achieved by this management, although The Prodigal Parson has achieved

Miss Ward, who has been playing the Princess in Mr. T. Edward Ward's The Love of the Princess play, was on the evening of the 30th ult. the recipient of a beautiful floral presentation made by the members of the Princess company on the occasion of her leaving them to resume her old part of Nell in Second to None.

"Lady Frederick," with Mrs. Brown-Potter in the name part, favoured Ealing with a visit on Wednesday afternoon, when Mr. Somerset Maugham's brilliant play was presented by Mr. Percy Hutchison's company. Mr. Philip Cunningham supported Mrs. Brown-Potter as Paradine Fouldes, and a powerful cast ensured success, which was testified in many recalls.

Mr. Jack Rowland, personal manager to Mr. J. Maundy-Gregory, will in future drop his nom-de-plume and be known by his real names of J. Rowland Sales. Mr. Sales for some time was lessee of various places of entertainment on the South Coast.

Mr. Charles Constant, proprietor of the Theatre Royal, Ryde, is producing his Aladdin at the Theatre Royal, Bolton, on Boxing Day for a run of four weeks. The pantomime will be produced by Victor Stevens, who will play his favourite part of Widow Twankee, supported by a powerful company. Mr. Constant's bright and funny production of Bluebeard will again go on tour, and will probably run up to Whitsun. His Florodora company is still meeting with great success on tour.

Mr. Herbert Leonard informs us that as certain objections have been raised to the title of his new play, The Kiss of Judas, it has been decided to re-name it. The new title chosen is the more attractive one of The Girl I Love.

Miss Mildred Blanchard has arranged with Messrs. Sullivan and Morris to return to America in October, 1910, and appear under the management named in the principal cities in the United States and Canada. Miss Blanchard will play in Cleopatra, Macbeth, Leah, and Fedora, supported by a company of English and American artists.

An experiment will be made at the Royal County Theatre, Kingston, on Monday, when Mr. Peter Davey will commence a series of high-class variety entertainments on the "two-houses-a-night" principle. A big star company has been engaged for the first week.

Mrs. D'Oyly Carte proposes to revive The Pirates of Penzance at the Savoy on Tuesday, Dec. 1. Iolanthe will not be played after Saturday, Nov. 28, up to which date it will be given in conjunction with The Mikado.

The cast of The Bacchæ of Euripides, to be played at Miss Lillah McCarthy's matinées at the Court Theatre on Nov. 10 and 17, will consist, in addition to Miss McCarthy, of Messrs. R. A. Beaton, Esmé Percy, William Fazan, George Ellis, Percy Anstey, and Sivori Levey, and Misses Mary Saker, Winifred Mayo, Juliet Hardinge, McHardy, Helen Macdonald, and Ethel Rhys. Dances will be performed by Misses Maie Hoey, Rubini, and Ruth Bower.

Mme. Patti received a greeting overwhelming in its warmth at the Albert Hall on Wednesday, when she sang to a vast audience in behalf of Father Bernard Vaughan's fund in aid of poor children. No less than seven numbers were exacted from the celebrated diva, her selections, with the inevitable encores, consisting of Handel's "Angels ever bright and fair," Lotti's "Pur Dicesti," Mozart's "Voi che sapete," Tosti's "Serenata," the Bach-Gounod "Ave Maria"—sung twice, with violin and organ obbligatos by Mr. Zacharewitsch and Mr. Adolph Mann—and "Home, Sweet Home," all rendered with the exquisite charm for which Mme. Patti is renowned. Contributions to the programme were also made by Miss Cecilia Loftus, Miss Marie Wadia, Miss Violet Elliott, Mr. Walter Hyde, Mr. Julien Henry, Mr. Robert Radford, Miss Irene Scharrer, and Mr. Zacharewitsch. Father Vaughan expressed his sincere thanks to Mme. Patti and all the artists who had given him their valuable help, and to Mr. N. Vert, who had undertaken the management of the concert

Mr. Charles Collette will "present" his Dickens sketch, Micawber, which has already achieved considerable success, on Monday and during the week at the County Theatre, Kingston-on-Thames. Mr. Collette appears in his old character of Micawber, supported by Messrs. J. A. Howitt (Uriah Heap) and Frederick Jacqués, and Mesdames Scott-Lauder, Lena Denton, and Joan Derry. Mr. Angelo Asher, musical director of the Chelsea Palace, has composed special music, and new costumes are provided.

Sir C. Hubert H. Parry, who is retiring from the presidency of the Musical Association, occupied the presidential chair for the last time at the annual dinner, held at the Criterion Restaurant on Tuesday. A large company included Dr. W. H. Cummings, Principal of the Guildhall School of Music, who succeeds to the office of president, Sir Charles Villiers Stanford, Dr. Maclean, Dr. Southgate, Mme. Rose Koenig, Mr. E. E. Cooper (chairman of the Royal Academy of Music), Mr. J. F. R. Stainer, Mr. Frank Pownall. Mr. Alfred Kastner, and Mr. J. Percy Baker (secretary). Sir Charles V. Stanford, proposing "The Musical Association," said it was in itself a record of the homogeneity and solidarity of the British school of music, which embraced all sides of music with impartiality and with a just appreciation. The Association was one of the pillars of that spirit.

Dr. W. H. Cummings, in proposing the chairman's health, said Sir Hubert Parry had endeared himself in the affections of all who knew him, whether personally or through his very fine and elevated music. They all most sincerely regretted his inability to continue in the office of President of the Association. Sir Hubert Parry, in responding, said he was proud to enjoy the kindly sympathy of the Musical Association, which looked at things seriously, had intellectual intentions, and judged all things in their verities. The members of the Assocation were not concerned with things which were not worth knowing, but endeavoured as specialists to unravel matters which might be to the better advantage of the art which they all served. He was confident that the broad-minded line taken up by the Association would be maintained and encouraged under its new president.

The interior of the Cork Opera House has undergone a complete transformation, and visitors to the house will be agreeably impressed by the change that has been effected. Attention is arrested immediately on entering by the new ceiling, with its appropriate decoration, the silk panels in the walls, the richly-mounted mirrors between artistic pilasters, the floors covered with mosaic marble, and the happy blending of colours in the whole decorative scheme.

The alterations include new exit doors for the pit, a new outlet for the orchestra stalls, through which a centre passage now runs, and a new platform and movable floor for the orchestra. The old winding staircase which afforded exit from the stalls is done away with, and the space which it occupied is thrown into one of the boxes. The dress-circle, enlarged to about twice its former size, is richly ornamented, and is provided with an elegant lounge. To the second circle seventeen new seats have been added, and a spacious promenade has been arranged at the back, with a new bar. Additional exits, a lady's cloak-room, and a store-room are also noticeable in this part of the house. The gallery now has two new centre passages, a new floor, bar, and lady's cloak-room.

New ventilating shafts for the dress circle, second circle, and pit have also been installed. The improvements reflect considerable credit on the enterprise of the directors, as well as on the manager of the Opera House, Mr. Richard J. Bell, who personally superintended the work.

Miss Marie McAulay, who has been seriously ill for the past month suffering from appendicitis, has now recovered, and has resumed her part of Julie de Beauvrais in The Soldier's Wedding.

The new Grand Opera House, Oldham, is nearing completion, and it has been decided definitely to open at Christmas, when Mr. Ernest Dottridge will produce a new version of Aladdin. Much interest is being manifested in the magnificent building, whose imposing appearance will compare with any theatre in the provinces. The stage has been made by that expert in this particular work Mr. Cawdrey, and it will be found sufficiently large to produce the biggest effects travelling.

That highly-promising young actress Miss Margaret Murce, has accepted a very excellent offer from Mr. F. W. Purcell to star in his new dramatic episode, by Luke Jellings, entitled What Women do for Men, on the Stoll Empires circuit.

The evergreen drama Man to Man, now playing to crowded houses at the Court Theatre, Wigan, will be toured by arrangement with Mr. William Bourne during the spring and autumn of next year, under the personal direction of Edward Lloyd and Clifford Bown. The bookings are in the hands of Mr. Lloyd, who has already arranged dates with most of the principal drama houses of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Wentworth Croke's company, in the new version of The Christian, which has been playing to full houses at the Dalston Theatre this week, will be at the Theatre Royal, Woolwich, on Monday next.

Mr. Frank Adair, wishing to devote his entire attention to his new production, The Heathen and the Christian, will sever his connection with Man to Man at Christmas.

"The Arab Gardener," a Tunisian play, in one act, adapted from the French of P. Elezear by Gladys Unger, will be put on in front of Jack Straw at the Vaudeville on Thursday next. All the characters are Arabs, and will be represented by Mr. H. R. Hignett, Mr. Percy Goodyer, Mr. Robert Whyte, jun., Mr. Charles Troode, Mr. E. Maturin, and Miss Mona Harrison. The scenery is from the expert brush of Mr. Walter Hann, the costumes designed by Miss Edith Craig, and the incidental music specially composed by Mr. Edward Jones.

Mrs. Emma Powell died on Monday last, aged eighty-five. The deceased lady had resided for many years in Jersey, and had been an annuitant of the Royal General Theatrical Fund for the past twenty-five years.

The Play Actors' programme at the Court tomorrow (Sunday) will consist of four little pieces. The first is The Sentimental Bray, by F. D. Bone, which will be acted by Messrs. W. Lawson Butt, Jackson Wilcox, Reginald Rivington, Harold Chapin, P. Percival Clark, Norman Trevor, Norman MacOwan, Ivan Berlyn, and A. E. Filmer, Miss Sybil Ruskin being the only lady member of the cast. Then comes Tilda's New Hat, by George Paston, with Miss Agnes Thomas, Miss Mabel Hackney, Miss Lorna Laurence, and Mr. Ashton Pearse in the cast.

The third novelty will be an incident, entitled Maraquita, by Michael Merrick, in which the characters will be sustained by Mr. Norman MacOwan, Mr. Edmund Waller, Mr. P. Percival Clark, Miss Nancy Grogan, and Miss Rita Milman. The evening will be concluded with A Dear Bargain, by L. C. Fenn, in which Mr. Edward Rigby, Miss Ida Phillips, Miss Rita Tomkins, Mr. Murri Moncrieff, and Mr. Patric Curwen will appear.

ITEMS OF INTEREST.

Miss Ashwell's Antecedents.

MISS LENA ASHWELL, who has since Saturday received the congratulations of hosts of friends on her marriage with Dr. Simson, comes, according to the Pall Mall Gazette, of a family whose connection with the sea and ships has been long and intimate. Miss Ashwell is the daughter of a naval officer, Captain Pocock, R.N., and in that beautiful old house at Westminster, almost in the shadow of the Abbey, in which she has lived of late years, there hangs a portrait by Beechey of a seaman great-uncle of the popular actress—one Captain Francis Cole, who distinguished himself in the great French wars, and took the red Cap of Liberty from the masthead of one of the ships of the Republic, a cap that was long preserved as a souvenir by Miss Ashwell's mother. Another forebear was Nicholas Pocock, a Bristol master-mariner, who accustomed himself to make sketches of anything of interest seen by him on his voyages, and ultimately abandoned the active service of the sea to become one of its most popular painters and an original member of the Old Water Colour Society.

A Manager of Experiences.

THE same paper says:—"M. Richepin, who, it is surmised, will succeed M. Claretie in the direction of the Théâtre Française, has had a pretty variegated career in the course of his sixty years of life. He began by cutting the Ecole Normale in favour of journalism, and it was while he was on a Bordeaux paper that he elected to become one of Bourbaki's irregular soldiers. The end of the war sent him back to a newspaper office again—several newspaper offices, in fact. Then he tried the stage, and found some favour at the then Tour d'Auvergne Theatre. His next appearance was as a café-reciter in the Quarter. And then he bounded into notoriety as the author of the notorious "Chansons des Gueux," a publication that eventually was considered fit to deprive its author of the rights of citizenship. Meantime he had gone to sea—'De tanguer et de rouler j'ai connu la secousse,' as he has told us. When he had had enough of that, he bloomed out again on the Boulevard as the author of 'La Glu'—the character which Mme. Réjane subsequently made so famous when the story was produced in stage-play form. It is to M. Richepin also that the French stage owes a most realistic prose version of Macbeth, while the house of Molière knows him already as a dramatist. His M. Scapin dates there from twenty years ago."

Cicely's Clever Quips.

MISS CICELY HAMILTON is as witty as her authorship of Diana of Dobson's would lead us to expect. In the paper which she read to the members of the O.P. Club at the Criterion on Sunday night, she remarked:—"The attitude of the critic is inevitably that of the superior person." "His attitude does not necessarily coincide with that of the public." "The theatre-going public is composed of persons who have not seen many plays. The stalls on the first night are occupied by people who have usually seen too many." "Dramatic criticism is the only profession in the world which is best carried on by men who don't know their business." "The actor is generally handled more leniently than the author." "It is a better thing for an author to cower in a box on a first night than to sit in the seats of the scornful—the stalls." Mr. Carl Hentschel occupied the chair, and amongst those who took part in the discussion were Messrs. Edward F. Spence, Sidney Dark, F. D. Bone, J. D. Johnston, T. McDonald Rendle, and Max Pemberton.

A Troubled "Tag."

"IN a great many of the old plays and farces," writes Mr. Butler Stanhope, "the principal character speaks outside before he enters on the stage, such words as "Upstairs, is he?" or "Never mind, I'll introduce myself." I was once with a very peculiar and eccentric manager who always spoke outside before he entered, and I have seen him after he spoke applaud himself in the wings, and then bounce on and enjoy his reception. There was a custom among certain actors in the dressing-rooms of chaffing younger actors who had certain lines to deliver, and make them alter the meaning, and sometimes to turn them into ridicule. We were performing Black-Eyed Susan, in which William is condemned to be hanged for striking his officer, and in the last scene is about to be strung up, when the captain enters and exclaims, 'Hold! If the prisoner is executed he is a murdered man! I alone am guilty, for I would have dishonoured him! I had written for his discharge; villainy kept back the document. 'Tis here, dated back. When William struck me he was not a King's seaman; I was not his officer.' The captain had been teased about this speech in the dressing-room, and when he rushed on at the finish, he exclaimed, "Hold! If the prisoner is murdered he's an executed man! When William struck me he was not a King's seaman, and I was not an officer or a man!' I need not repeat what the manager said to that young gentleman. Whilst at Southport during a stock season, the Lancashire Hussars had their annual training, and one night gave their 'bespeak,' and all the officers attended in mess dress, including their Colonel, Lord Skelmersdale (now Earl Lathom). We were giving Still Waters Run Deep, and a lady London star was playing Mrs. Sternhold. During the very dramatic scene between Mrs. Sternhold and Captain Hawksley, in turning up the lamp it toppled over, and a portion of the oil was spilt on the lady's dress. The affair was soon settled, thanks to the presence of mind of the Captain Hawksley, and the play proceeded. The officers, who were all seated in the stalls, witnessed the accident, and at the conclusion of the play, in the most tactful and graceful manner, presented the lady with ten sovereigns to purchase a new dress. The next morning she told us that a shilling bottle of benzine had removed all trace of the stains on her dress, and it looked as good as new."

Hat and Hair.

AT the Queen's Theatre, the other evening, says the Mail, when the experiment was made of prohibiting the wearing of matinée hats, a lady on her way to the stalls, told by an attendant that she must remove her headgear, seemed embarrassed, and said "I cannot." A man accompanying her remonstrated, whereupon she took him a few steps aside, and said in an audible whisper, "You stupid! Some of my curls are fixed to my hat!" The couple left the theatre. The inscription, "Hats and bonnets not allowed," is stamped on the tickets sold at the theatre, but it was not on the lady's tickets, which were bought at a library.

French Theatres.

"IT is odd," says an evening paper, "that the French, being the greatest theatre-goers, are contented with the worst theatrical accommodation. They sit without murmur in airless theatres, on hard and uncomfortable seats, and submit to a series of petty exactions from elderly harpies which would drive any other people to an eager protest. With a single exception—the theatre consecrated to the genius of Sarah Bernhardt—there is no temple of Thespis where the conditions approach those of English houses. In between the acts the public passes cheerfully over your toes, and during the progress of the piece your personal comfort is absolutely sacrificed to the desire of the management to crowd as many seats into a given space as possible without absolutely causing the rows to touch. It must be because of this that the French acting is so superior—otherwise the theatres would be empty.

"DOLLY REFORMING HERSELF."

Comedy in Four Acts, by Henry Arthur Jones, produced at the Haymarket Theatre, on Tuesday, Nov. 3.

Mrs. Harry Telfer .....MISS ETHEL IRVING
Harry Telfer .....MR. ROBERT LORAINE
Matthew Barron .....MR. C. M. LOWNE
Capt. Lucas Wentworth..MR. CHARLES R. MAUDE
Peters .....MISS ADA WEBSTER
Criddle .....MR. GILBERT PORTEOUS
The Rev. James Pilcher..MR. HERBERT BUNSTON
Professor Sturgess .....MR. E. LYALL SWETE
Mrs. Sturgess .....MISS MARGARET HALSTAN

Mr. Henry Arthur Jones's comedy is decidedly amusing, though it must be admitted that it is more amusing in some parts than in others. Fortunately, the fun is most fast and furious just at the right point in the play, i.e., in the third act of the four into which the comedy is divided. This act, or rather the latter portion of it, is a "slice out of life," a realistic reproduction of a domestic duologue which evidently went straight to the hearts of the audience on Tuesday. The truth of the representation was warmly recognised, and the scene in which Mr. Harry Telfer "passes"—or rather, protests violently against "passing"—his wife's dressmakers' bills is alone enough to make the success of a piece.

If there is a moral to the play, it is that people cannot reform themselves by mere effort of will. Professor Sturgess, a scientist, maintains, indeed, that our actions are dictated by the condition of the "grey matter of the brain." The scene is a country house in Surrey, and the local vicar induces everyone at Mr. Harry Telfer's house on New Year's Day to form good resolutions for the coming year. Mrs. Harry Telfer ("Dolly"), whose fault is extragavance in dress; Mr. Harry Telfer, who is inclined to be overbearing and profane; and Captain Lucas Wentworth, who is philandering with Mrs. Sturgess, the young wife of a learned and elderly professor, all promise to turn over a new leaf. Mrs. Sturgess is too self-satisfied to imitate them; and in order to put a stop to the dangerous intrigue Mrs. Telfer turns the Captain out of the house, after some amusing opposition on his part. Then Mrs. Telfer prepares for the ordeal of presenting her husband with her "bills" for the year. The examination ends in both of them becoming violently angry, and calling in poor Mr. Barron, Mrs. Telfer's father, as a mediator. A year elapses, and some amount of improvement is visible. Telfer has decided to tolerate his wife's extravagance, and the "philandering" has gone no further, though it has not been abandoned, for the Professor intercepts a compromising letter from the Captain to Mrs. Sturgess, and threatens proceedings for divorce. But the others turn the tables on him by quoting from his great book about the non-existence of free-will, and he is obliged to forgive Mrs. Sturgess under penalty of "eating" his own (printed) words.

Miss Ethel Irving played Dolly Telfer with all the quick keenness and earnest alertness of which she has proved herself the mistress in so many popular performances. The highly-strung, nervous temperament of Dolly and her slightly plebeian style were shown by many little touches, too small to enumerate; but the result, in the aggregate, was very effective. There is nothing of the spirit of compromise about Dolly; she is the essence of downright decision and hot partisanship. Miss Irving has all the force and energy necessary for such a character, and she plays her part for all that it is worth, especially in the scene of the bills. Here there was no need for finesse or high polish. Husband and wife laid aside the veneer of civilisation, and attacked each other with "prehistoric" violence and frankness. Miss Irving scored immensely in this scene, the gradually growing excitement of the woman, her feminine tricks and wiles, her resort to tears, and her final angry appeal to her parent being rendered with a vigour and vitality that quite carried the audience away. She was ably assisted by Mr. Robert Loraine, whose strong, straightforward style well suited the rôle of the hot-headed, warm-hearted Harry Telfer. His treatment of his share in the great scene was strikingly artistic; and his embodiment had a well-bred and manly flavour which made it increasingly amiable. That always easy and accomplished actor, Mr. C. M. Lowne, gave an unimpeachable performance as the easy-going much-harassed Matthew Barron, acting with a mellow geniality that was very agreeable, and with a quiet, unforced humour warmly to be praised. A very neat, quiet, and polished performance of the part of Captain Lucas Wentworth was contributed by Mr. Charles R. Maude, the repose of his manner and the calm yet clear and sharp way in which he made his points—and not one of them was slurred or missed—being in the true spirit of comedy. He managed to hit exactly the right note, and his touch was light yet firm throughout. The very unobtrusiveness of the rendering and its freedom from all exaggeration redoubled its value. Mr. Herbert Bunston as the Rev. James Pilcher gave a capital notion of the hearty, earnest, country Vicar, with plenty of predominance, but always agreeable and in harmony with his surroundings. Mr. E. Lyall Swete as Professor Sturgess supplied one of those ponderously quaint embodiments in which he excels, his make-up being admirable, and his costume characteristic down to the trouser straps. The dry, solemn drollery of the Professor was irresistible, and his sonorous delivery of scientific arguments "told" immensely. Great success was won by Miss Marguerite Halstan, whose figure and style were well suited to the rôle of Mrs Sturgess, her graceful bearing and delicate diction greatly assisting her. Added to this was a delightfully humorous appreciation of the comedy of the part, which showed itself in complete freedom from over-emphasis, and a thoroughly serious treatment of Mrs. Sturgess's sentimental outpourings. The piece was mounted in the style which we always expect and obtain at the Haymarket, and, under the attentive stage management of Mr. Harry Norton, it went with great smoothness. The artists were called and recalled, and, had the enthusiasm which prevailed at the end of the third act been maintained to the end, the author would certainly have been summoned.

A COPY of "THE ERA" will be forwarded to any address in the United Kingdom for six stamps.

H. B. IRVING ON PLAYS.

The striking success of the revival of The Lyons Mail by Mr. H. B. Irving suggests hopeful anticipations. Mr. Irving is an artist of great achievement and still greater possibility. With a voice, physique, and facile "mask" which are wonderfully reminiscent of his late father, he combines the culture of the college and the mental training of the Temple. In the prime of artistic life—he is just thirty-eight—and with over seventeen years of stage experience, he is ripe and ready to take up a leading position on the London stage. And he is certainly one of the most interesting personalities connected with the drama.

"No, I really have not the least sympathy with criminals," says Mr. Irving, alert and awake, though interviewed at an unreasonably early hour at his pleasant house in Upper Woburn-place.

"I fancied after reading your 'Life of Judge Jeffreys' and your 'French Criminals of the Nineteenth Century' that you held somewhat cynical views on the subject."

"Not in the least. I consider that all the rascals mentioned in my second book richly deserved all they got; and as for Jeffreys, all I wanted to do was to clear away from the common estimate of him all the undeserved abuse which was showered on him by party writers of his time. He was certainly a very violent-tempered man, and suffered from a most painful disease; but to describe him as a 'monster' because he carried out energetically his Sovereign's orders as to the ruthless punishment of the Somersetshire rebels is absurd. I never wished to whitewash him, as the cant phrase goes."

"But crime evidently interests you?"

"Yes, certainly. In studying a criminal case we get as near as possible a nakedly complete view of the motives that influenced the criminal. They are laid bare to us is a manner which we cannot attain to in any other way. We get, in short, a post-mortem on the disease from which they suffered. You must remember that I wrote these books when I was reading for the Bar."

"There is nothing psychological about Dubosc."

"No, he is the common or garden criminal, just as Lesurques is the ordinary honest man. There is no apologising or whitewashing in The Lyons Mail. Indeed, on that account some may consider it a little old-fashioned."

"Yet it is an immense success at the Shaftesbury."

"I am glad to say that it is. It shows that the elements of popularity are much the same as they were in my father's time."

"I noticed in your performance of Lesurques and Dubosc, and especially in the latter, that, while what I may call the broad lines of the business were adhered to, many of the details were different—at any rate, as far as my memory serves me."

"Your impression was correct. I did not see my father act in the piece often enough to 'memorise' all the minor details of his reading. You must remember that after I joined John Hare's company at the Garrick in 1901 I was a great deal in the provinces. Before that I was at Oxford, or reading for the Bar. Besides, at that time I never thought of playing in The Lyons Mail. Of course, I have adhered to the 'traditions' of the part. I am a great believer in tradition. I remember when my father was accused of taking certain 'business' from Charles Kean, how he used to say that there were certain scenes that could only be played in one way, because that was the right and true way in which to play them; and that, when a situation had been analysed and stage-managed once for all by a man of genius, it was mere vanity to change the business for the sake of novelty. Tradition, I consider, must always exercise an advantageous influence on the stage. It is only by tradition that we can gain anything like a school of acting. I don't mean an academy, you know. The school of dramatic art may be—in fact, is—of great value in taking the rough edges off the aspirant, and thus saving the manager a great deal of trouble. But, in the end, it comes to him to form the young artist, to impart to him his methods, to inspire him with some of his genius. My father used to say that he kept a dramatic school for thirty years."

"And a school of dramatic art may be of great use in weeding out the impossible aspirants?"

"Undoubtedly. The curse of the stage at present is the great rush of incapable people to get upon it. We have no official means of stemming this rush. Many of these incapables have influence, audacity, and obstinacy. And I am afraid that in the bustle and press of the struggle modest merit too often is thrust aside or trampled underfoot."

"I suppose an 'outsider' can have no idea of the amount of incapacity that exists?"

"I should say not. Take play-writing, for instance. We are always being told that we never read plays, and that genius knocks in vain at the door of the manager's room. Well, I do read plays—I am always reading them. But I never find the gold I am hoping for. It is astonishing what dreadfully silly stuff people who are undoubtedly clever in other ways will send in to a manager as a 'play.' They must think the stage a very silly place."

"You are correcting a number of my false impressions. I had an idea that managers never read plays."

"Some people have an idea that you belong to the hyper-intellectual, morbidly analytic modern school of thought brought into fashion by French writers like Brieux and others?"

"Whatever I may think of the artistic merit of their works, I am absolutely certain that they will never attract the English public. They may be produced as English curiosities, but they are out of the question for the manager of a theatre which appeals to the regular playgoer. The public will not have pessimism at any price. They do not mind a melancholy ending. What they will not stand is a cynical one. Look at Lights Out: there was an 'unhappy ending,' if you like! But it was a success, because it was neither pessimistic nor cynical. The public does not object to being made to shed tears; but they must be tears of sympathy, not tears of hopelessness. Within these limitations, I do not believe that any play can be 'too good' for them. Anything that is poignant, human, and strenuous they appreciate, however finely the thread be spun. But they will not be made miserable, and they will not have pathology at any price. I think myself that the stage should be a teacher, but that it should exercise its functions indirectly and unobtrusively. And, first and foremost, the drama must be good as a play. It must be effective as a dramatic entertainment first, and didactic afterwards. That is why I have chosen The Lyons Mail to open my season at the Shaftesbury."

"When are we to see you in Cæsar Borgia, Louis XI., Charles I., The Bells, and Becket?"

"There is no need to talk of that yet, The Lyons Mail is 'going' so strongly. Sufficient for the day, you know, is the success thereof."

MR. BOURCHIER AT RATHMINES.

The second annual prize distribution in connection with Rathmines College took place recently at the Parochial Hall, Belgrave-square, Dublin. Professor Dowden, LL.D., presided over a large attendance, which included Mr. Arthur Bourchier, M.A., and Sir Chas. A. Cameron, C.B., M.D.

The Headmaster having presented his report, Mr. Arthur Bourchier said he would like to talk to them as a schoolboy. He was afraid when he was at school he was a naughty boy—it was a way boys had. At his school they taught nothing useful. They were taught to be ornamental and to study erudite works and all sorts of dead masters, but they were never allowed to do anything useful except mathematics. Latin and Greek were very good foundations, but when modern languages were an "extra" and music was rigidly excluded that was wrong. He had always been very fond of music, but he could get none at school without paying extra. Music was one of the most beautiful things God had given, and when, at school, they were not encouraged to love music he felt—he was certain, in fact—that that was wrong. Therefore it was a great joy to him to find that day that at Rathmines College the rising generation were encouraged in music. Of course dead languages were valuable; but, as Mr. Logan had said, a child's education began when he was taught to think for himself, and it was very difficult for a child to think in Latin or Greek. He felt, with Mr. Logan, "that the main defect in our present system of education was that it aimed at imparting knowledge rather than training capacity and character, and that a boy leaves school burdened with a store of facts rather than with a quickened perception." It was vital in the struggle of life that children should be taught as soon as possible to know their own minds. How could they know their own minds if they were perpetually being taught subjects in which they could take no interest? If a boy had a taste for mechanics why should he be put to do a hundred lines? If he had a boy he would rather send him to Rathmines College than to many others he knew. (Applause.) Mr. Bourchier, in conclusion, apologised for the absence of his wife, Miss Violet Vanbrugh. Acting took a lot of nervous force out of one, and women were not as strong as men—they were, he believed, stronger in the House of Commons at present, but not elsewhere. (Laughter.)

Mr. Bourchier then distributed the prizes.

The Rev. Dr. Logan moved a vote of thanks to Mr. Bourchier, and it was heartily passed.

Mr. Bourchier, in replying, announced that next year he would be pleased to give a prize for the best work in elocution, and he wished that the prize should take the form of a copy of Professor Dowden's "Mind and Life of Shakespeare."

"PLAYLETS, LIMITED."

A duologue with the above title was produced at the Rehearsal Theatre on Wednesday afternoon. It is the work of that clever writer Mr. Victor Stevens, and its object is the exhibition of the versatile talent of Miss Margaret Lynhart, a bright and vivacious artist, who works with unflagging energy throughout. The scene is the rehearsal-room of a musical agency, where Molly Millington and her admirer, Percy Vere, find themselves. After some bright and casual conversation, Molly consents to give Percy proof of her skill; and thus are introduced a series of clever imitations. There is a skit on the moat scene in The Duke's Motto, and another on the extravagancies of the Sicilian Players. In these both artists engage, and then Miss Lynhart, as Molly, imitates Yvette Guilbert quite cleverly, singing her song beginning "I will give you the gates of Heaven" with faithful mimicry of the French artist. Next Molly gives a reproduction of a scene from Mme. Sarah Bernhardt's performance in La Dame aux Camellias, the passionate emotion and subsequent collapse of Marguerite being shown with thrilling effect. This is followed by an imitation of Miss Maude Allan in her "Spring Song" and "Salome" dances. In these Miss Lynhart does not don skirts as diaphanous as those worn by the great Palace poseuse, but she catches the spirit of Miss Allan's performance quite cleverly. Miss Lynhart also imitates Mr. Harry Lauder in one of his Scotch songs. The sketch winds up with a dashing dance in tricolour costume with a song about Paris. In this Mr. Clevedon Woods joins with Miss Lynhart, and also bridges over the inevitable interval caused by one of her costume changes with a comic song, which he renders very neatly and drolly. The sketch is full of refined fun and smart activity and intelligence, and it had a cordial and appreciative reception.

MISS ADA McKENZIE AND MISS ALYS TURNER'S RECITAL.

Miss Ada McKenzie and Miss Alys Turner gave a successful recital at Steinway Hall on Saturday evening, Oct. 31. They were assisted by M. Edouard Garceau and Miss Ethel Bauer. The concert, which was under the direction of Miss Alice E. Joseph, commenced with a pianoforte solo by Miss Ethel Bauer, who gave an admirable interpretation of Schumann's "Aufschwung" and "Airs de Ballet (Gluck-Saint-Saëns). In two recitations, "Cheering up an Invalid" and "Our Traveller," Miss Alys Turner displayed a bright and effective style and clear enunciation. Miss Ada McKenzie, who has a pleasing soprano voice, was first heard in "The Nightingale Trill" (Ganz) and Arne's "Where the bee sucks," and later on in the concert sang "O cessate di piagarmi" (Scarlatti) with success. Miss Mackenzie made an excellent impression and her contribution to the programme was greatly enjoyed. M. Edouard Garceau greatly pleased the audience with several Chansons des Cabarets de Montmartre, which were sung with appropriate and expressive gestures; and Miss Alys Turner in her excellent recitations of "An Old Fool" (G. R. Sims), "The Idyll of Battle Hollow" (a characteristic sketch by Bret Harte), and "Bric-à-Brac" received warm applause. The other recitations given by Miss Turner were "What They Do at the Springs" and "A Lesson with the Fan." Miss Turner is an elocutionist of real dramatic power, and her well-chosen selections were greatly enjoyed. M. Garceau was again heard in his clever French songs, and Miss Ethel Bauer received an encore for a brilliant performance of Chopin's "Polonaise in A flat."

ACTORS' BENEVOLENT FUND.

Once more we take pleasure in reminding our readers of the forthcoming dinner which is to be held on Sunday evening, Dec. 13, at the Hotel Metropole, in aid of the Actors' Benevolent Fund. And in performing this agreeable office, we have to associate with it the name of Mr. Cyril Maude, who will take the chair on the occasion referred to. Mr. Maude's interest in charitable work is well known, and, furthermore, is well appreciated. He has recently addressed the following letter to many prominent people in theatrical and other circles:—

"The Playhouse,
"Northumberland-avenue,
"Charing Cross, Nov. 9, 1908.

"Dear Sir,—I have been honoured by a request from the president, Sir Charles Wyndham, and the committee of the Actors' Benevolent Fund, to take the chair at the annual dinner which is arranged to take place on Sunday, Dec. 13, at the Whitehall Rooms, Hotel Metropole, at 7.30 p.m.

"I sincerely hope that you will find it in your power to be present on that evening. The poverty and distress among the less successful of our comrades in the theatrical profession is very great, and very hard for them to bear. The Actors' Benevolent Fund has for many years done an enormous amount of good, and is thoroughly deserving of support, helping, as it does, those who are sinking, rescuing many who would otherwise "go under," and supporting the aged and helpless among us.

"The dinner has been fixed for a Sunday evening, in the confident hope that many actors who have hitherto been prevented from attending the banquets will find it possible to come.

"Earnestly begging your kind presence and support,

"I remain, yours faithfully,
"CYRIL MAUDE."

Speaking on the subject to our interviewer, Mr. Maude stated that to his own personal knowledge the amount of good done by the fund was enormous. "Several old actors," he said, "have been, and are being, maintained by it in their old age, and a great deal is spent every week in relieving urgent cases of necessity. This fund, I need hardly tell you, had the warmest approval and support of the late Sir Henry Irving, and Sir Charles Wyndham, the present president, takes a very considerable interest in it. It is owing to the latter's request that I am taking the chair at this year's dinner. There has not, by the way, been a dinner for two years. I shall on this night announce the amount of money that has been collected for other charities than theatrical through the agency of actors at special performances. I think the statement I shall have to make on the subject will astound the public. That is why I have no compunction in asking aid for the Actors' Benevolent Fund from people who are, or might be, interested in other charities, nearly all of which are helped in one way or another by actors and actresses. I have a rule at my own theatre whereby I demand five per cent. of the receipts at a charity performance for the Actors' Orphanage Fund, of which I am president. That fund, by the way, is in a very healthy condition. We have special homes for the children, and we see that they attend good schools.

"Whenever I look at a crowd of unemployed, I at once think of the miserable condition of some of the people in my own profession who are unable to organise a 'hunger march,' and who suffer more than the outside public have any idea of. The distress seems to get more and more acute every year, for the reason that the profession gets more and more crowded. And yet men and women who take up the acting profession and afterwards find themselves unfitted for it relinquish it much more readily than was formerly the case.

"Sometimes actors come to me and complain that the Actors' Benevolent Fund does not look after people in the provinces. If such an impression exist in any one's mind, it is quite an erroneous one. The fund helps all genuine cases, and those cases that are not helped are ignored for very good reasons. I have never watched a committee work with a greater sense of humanity and kindly feeling than does the committee of the A.B.F. Every application is considered most thoroughly, and, speaking personally, I have never known of a case of urgent necessity that has not been satisfied at once. I think that the remarks which have been sometimes passed by actors against the fund have been made with the wish that there might be founded some other fund which would not examine so rigidly the antecedents of the applicants for relief. But everybody must realise the necessity for the employment of discrimination and discretion in the granting of aid from a fund which does so much good in assisting genuine members of the profession who are, temporarily or permanently, in a distressful financial condition.

"As the dinner this year takes place on a Sunday evening, it is hoped that many actors who have been hitherto unable to attend these annual functions will be able to come and prove by their presence and support their interest and belief in this benevolent society. For myself, I feel a tremendous responsibility in taking the chair on behalf of people who are suffering in silence, and who are unable to walk about with banners and parade their poverty in the public thoroughfares. I might mention, incidentally, that one method I put into force to assist the Actors' Orphanage is to charge every actor and actress who obtains a free seat in the Playhouse the small sum of sixpence. In that way we get a decent little sum of money every year. The same system might be put in operation at the other theatres in London and throughout the provinces for the benefit of the Actors' Benevolent Fund."

One aspect of the beneficent work of the Fund is, that no player nowadays, when the hand of death has put an end to his earthly labours, will be permitted to be laid to rest in a pauper's grave, but will be buried at the expense of the A.B.F. in the event of his having died in poor cidcumstances. Surely this is a benefit which cannot be lightly overlooked for the self-respect of the profession. Then, were every guarantee needed as to the bona-fide and just distribution of the money at the command of the executive committee of the Fund, it would be found in the list of names of eminent and responsible actors comprising that committee. Thus, Sir Charles Wyndham is the president, and Mr. Tree, Mr. George Alexander, and Mrs. D'Oyly Carte are vice-presidents; while the committee includes Messrs. Harry Nicholls (treasurer), Edward Terry, Cyril Maude, Robert Courtneidge, Lionel Rignold, Algernon Syms, Isaac Cohen, Harry Loveday, Morris Abrahams, J. D. Beveridge, M. R. Morand, J. Bannister Howard, Charles Cruikshanks, Arthur Williams, Fred Wright, Akerman May, A. B. Tapping, Lionel Brough, E. H. Bull, and Sydney Paxton, the trustees being Sir Charles Wyndham, Mr. Tree, and Mr. Edward Terry. Before passing from this subject, one can fittingly bestow a word of appreciation to the well-directed labours of the secretary, Mr. C. I. Coltson.

AT the close of the Motor Show, Olympia is to be converted into a gigantic roller skating rink. The promoters intend to do everything on a lavish scale, and before Christmas Olympia will contain one of the largest maple floors ever constructed. London is not, however, to be entirely deprived of its Fun City, for an up to date show, on the lines that have proved so popular at Olympia during the last two winters, will completely fill the annexe at Olympia, and will be under the guidance and management of Mr. Charles B. Cochran.

STAGE STAFF GOSSIP.

It is gratifying to know that Mr. Forbes Robertson has kindly consented to lend the use of Terry's Theatre for a meeting in connection with the Provident and Share-out Fund which the Executive Committee of the National Association of Theatrical Employees has for some time past had under consideration.

The committee, recognising that a large section of employees—men and women—are not eligible to join any of the existing theatrical or music hall societies, propose to establish a fund open to any man or woman employed in any capacity in a theatre or music hall in the Metropolitan area. They feel confident that with a large membership—which is not only possible, but highly probable—much larger benefits can be assured than any existing society of employees can give. It may be remembered, when details were published in this column, that it was proposed to assure during sickness of a member 15s. per week for thirteen weeks and 7s. 6d. for a further thirteen weeks if necessary, covering a period of sickness during six months in any one year and providing a possible sum of £14 12s. 6d. for sick pay alone. It is also proposed that on the death of a member a levy of 6d. per member be paid, and on the death of a member's wife a levy of 3d. per member. These sums on a membership of 2,000 would yield for the widow the very substantial sum of £50 and for the member £25. When it is admitted that the present funeral allowance (so called) provided by many societies is barely sufficient to meet the funeral expenses, and that the dependants of a member are generally immediately face to face with the want of the means of subsistence, the value of this proposal will be apparent. It is proposed that the contribution shall be 6d. per week, and—what is of special interest—the surplus funds at the end of each year shall be shared out in equal proportions among the members, thus combining with an insurance fund the additional benefits of a savings bank.

It is understood that all these questions as to contributions and benefits are subject to confirmation by the members, but as to the necessity of some such fund and its utility for all engaged in the work of the theatre and the music hall there cannot be two opinions. It should be noted that membership is practically open to all connected with the stage working staff—stage-managers and nightmen, all in the advertising and billing departments, the box-office, attendants inside and outside, back and front, supers, firemen, cleaners—in fact, anyone, man or woman, who can show they have, as an employee, a bond-fide connection with a theatre or music hall.

The prospects for an efficient and economical management, which is of the greatest importance, are everything that could be desired. The Executive Committee for the time being of the National Association of Theatrical Employees will be the responsible governing body. A reference to the names of the men composing this body will justify this conclusion. The office and staff of the committee will also be placed at the service of the new fund, and it will thus commence under trained and experienced auspices.

The meeting arranged to be held in Terry's Theatre will take place on Sunday evening, Nov. 15, at seven o'clock. Mr. James Cullen, master carpenter of the St. James's Theatre (president of the N.A.T.E.), will preside, and he will be supported by Mr. G. H. Dyball, stage-manager of the London Pavilion; Mr. C. T. Cory, master carpenter of the Vaudeville Theatre; Mr. Arthur Palmer, master carpenter of the Comedy Theatre; Mr. William Barbour, electrician of the St. James's Theatre; Mr. H. J. Powell, property master of Hicks Theatre; Mr. Philip Sheridan, electrician of the Waldorf Theatre; Mr. J. Reid, president of the Carpenters' Society; Mr. Charles Thorogood, president of the No. 1 Branch N.A.T.E.; Mr. J. N. Hunt, New Theatre; Mr. G. Pickering, Duke of York's Theatre; Mr. J. H. Radford, Comedy Theatre; Mr. H. Lane and Mr. Ed. Stow, Savoy Theatre; Mr. A. Spaull; Mr. A. Jones, of the Royal Opera House, and a host of well-known men connected with other theatres and music halls.

Mr. Wm. Johnson, general secretary N.A.T.E., will submit the proposal to the meeting on behalf of the committee. The rules will provide an age limit, but it is proposed to admit all otherwise eligible, without regard to age, who apply at once, at, or after, the meeting. It is therefore important that all interested will attend the meeting so as to hear the whole conditions of membership and to avail themselves of the special terms offered to those who join at once. It is to be hoped that employees generally will avail themselves of this opportunity to provide against unavoidable privations due to sickness and death and the irregularity of employment inseparable from this business. It is also suggested that the "Open" Fund now conducted by the above committee be handed over to the new fund and maintained as a permanent aid to its members. If the employees as a body show by joining this fund that they are willing to mutually aid one another in times of individual need, they are likely to get far more assistance for their Benevolent Fund.

The following additions to the list of patrons of the employees' concert on Nov. 29 have been received:—Mr. Oswald Stoll, £3 3s.; Mr. Eric Lewis, £1; and Mr. H. B. Irving. Miss Marie George has very kindly offered to help in selling programmes. Tickets may now be obtained from the following, and as no money can be taken at the doors of the theatre on the evening of the concert, it will be necessary to sell all tickets before the day:—Mr. James Cullen, master carpenter, and Mr. Wm. Barbour, electrician, St. James's Theatre; Mr. T. Swift, Alhambra Theatre; Mr. Arthur Palmer, master carpenter, Comedy Theatre; Mr. R. Andrews, master carpenter, Prince of Wales's Theatre; Mr. G. T. Dalgarno, Empire, Leicester-square; Mr. W. C. Weaver, Shaftesbury Theatre; Mr. G. H. Dyball, stage-manager, London Pavilion; Mr. H. J. Powell, property master, Hicks Theatre; Mr. David Sheridan, electrician, Scala Theatre; Mr. G. Pickering, Duke of York's Theatre; Messrs. Honour and Hepden, Wyndham's Theatre; Mr. J. H. Hunt, New Theatre; Mr. G. Dyer, Drury Lane Theatre; Mr. R. Roger, Holborn Empire; Mr. G. Poynton-Applebee, electrician, Gaiety Theatre; Mr. W. Beavington, Aldwych Theatre; Mr. P. Sheridan, electrician, Waldorf Theatre; Mr. A. George, master carpenter, and Mr. C. Terry, Lyceum Theatre; Mr. A. Beasley, Terry's Theatre; Mr. Ed. Stow, Savoy Theatre; Mr. C. T. Cory, master carpenter, Vaudeville Theatre; Mr. W. Grant, Adelphi Theatre; Mr. W. Pullinger, master carpenter, Garrick Theatre; Mr. H. J. Kemp, His Majesty's Theatre; Mr. H. Hildyard, stage-manager, Hippodrome, Balham; Mr. P. Barry, Islington Hippodrome; Mr. Sturgess, Olympia, Shoreditch; Mr. H. G. Brooke, stage-manager, Paragon; Mr. W. Yates, Britannia, Hoxton; and Mr. H. Bowmer, Gaiety Theatre.

The General Staff Branch (London) of the N.A.T.E., whose committee will meet on Wednesday next, have made arrangement for the use of a room at the Roundtable Inn, St. Martin's-court, St. Martin's-lane, which will be used by members in want of work and where men can be secured any evening except Sundays, from seven o'clock to nine o'clock by those wanting men for odd shows or regular employment. Those who have occasion to run about to find a man to fill an unexpected vacancy and those who have to hang about stage doors in inclement weather will appreciate the advantages of this arrangement. The arrangement comes into operation on Monday evening next. At the last meeting of this committee seventeen applications for membership were granted.

At the last meeting of the Heads of Departments Association Committee Mr. J. Cullen, the President, in the chair, five applications for membership, including two from stage managers, one master carpenter, one electrician, and one property master, were granted. The consideration of the annual dinner of the society was deferred until after the annual concert.

Employees in Birmingham are reminded that the Provisional Committee appointed at a recent meeting to form a branch of the N.A.T.E. meet to-day at 3 o'clock in the Victoria Inn, John Bright-street, when applications for membership will be received and any information desired given to those interested.

A general meeting of members of the Middlesbrough Branch of the N.A.T.E. was held in the Black Lion Hotel last Sunday. A number of members of the newly formed branch in Stockton-on-Tees were also present, there being the largest gathering of members since the formation of a branch in this district. Having regard to the energy and tact displayed by the local secretary, Mr. A. E. Wright, the committee in London sent a gold badge which they requested Mr. H. Andrews, the branch President, to present in the names of the National Executive to Mr. Wright. Mr. Andrews in making the presentation said it was equally pleasing to all the members of the branch to know that the services of their secretary were as much appreciated by the committee in London as by the committee and members of the branch. They all respected and felt confidence in Mr. Wright, and he was glad to be the medium of handing to him this gold badge, the first presented to any member, as a token of their goodwill and regard.

The Vice-President and other members, including Mr. J. Patton, the delegate of the branch, and Mr. Grainger endorsed the remarks made by the chairman. Mr. Wright, in replying, said the presentation came as a great surprise to him. He would prize the badge very much, and as it was given as a badge of merit he would always endeavour to deserve it. He thanked the chairman and the members for their support and goodwill and also the committee in London for their appreciation of his efforts on behalf of the Society. A vote of thanks to the chairman terminated the proceedings.

The Committee of the N.A.C.O. met on Tuesday at 29, Wellington-street, Mr. E. Catlin, President, in the chair. It was decided to send out examination papers to all members and applicants for membership who had not yet had them and to arrange for a meeting of examiners next week. The question of pay to operators who give assistance to artists outside their own work was again considered, and a decision deferred to the next meeting. The secretary was instructed to send out a report to members on several important matters and to urge members in need of any engagement to keep the office informed, as several applications for operators had been received during the past week.

The committee will, with the kind assistance of an exhibitor, provide all the necessary apparatus for showing animated pictures at the Benevolent Fund concert on Sunday, Nov. 29.

DRAMATIC AND MUSICAL LAW.

BY A. A. STRONG, LL.B. (LOND.), SOLICITOR.

Your book will, I am sure, be a valuable aid to all managers and actors.—Sir Henry Irving.

Mr. Strong states the whole case very clearly.—Illustrated London News.

Should be found very useful.—Pelican.

The work succeeds in making plain the thorny legal path that every manager and artist must tread, and by a timely consultation of its pages they may avoid much misapprehension and trouble.—Star.

Mr. Joseph Carter's Ten San-Tan Girls have been secured to open on the Continent, on completion of their pantomime engagement.

Wullie Frame of "Hooch aye" fame, who is never out of fashion, will have a hearty welcome from the fisher-folk at Great Yarmouth in the Hippodrome on Monday.

Little did the public think on Monday night while witnessing the new Scottish sketch, The Pride o' the Heather, at the Zoo-Hippodrome, Glasgow, that Miss Helen Kennedy, who played the title-rôle so brightly, was oppressed by a sad bereavement, having buried her father that afternoon.

By special request the British Imperial Band will give the overture "1812" with full effects at the Coliseum concert on Sunday evening, under the auspices of the Amalgamated Musicians' Union. As the band contains 100 musicians, with Mr. W. Davin as conductor, the performance ought to be worthy of the composer. Miss Cicely Gleeson-White is to be the vocalist, and Stedman's Boys' Choir will also be in evidence.

Mr. Bransby Williams, in selections from his répertoire of characters from Shakespeare and Dickens; Senor Varez, the well-known Spanish tenor from the Royal Opera House, Madrid; the Dunedin Troupe of cyclists; Ernie Mayne; and Harriet Vernon, in her original scena, A Yuletide Story, are due at the Coliseum on Monday. Miss Cecilia Loftus still continues to draw admiring crowds.

A writer, in 1840, commenting on the state of the drama, asserts that the first blow to the destruction of the great theatres has been the extraordinary increase in the demands of all kinds of actors; and to illustrate the injustice of the salaries then given, gives the following statistics of the payments made to actors of a preceding generation:—Munden, Fawcett, Quick, Edwin, Jack Johnstone, and their class, received £14 a week; William Lewis, a superb comedian, £20 a week; Mathews, in 1812, wrote, "Now to my offer, which I think stupendous and magnificent, £17 per week;" John Kemble, £36 a week; Miss O'Neill, after achieving a good provincial reputation, received £15 at Covent Garden, and never more than £25; Cooke was paid £20 a week; Mrs. Jordan, £31 10s. a week; Dowton, £12, and never more than £20 a week; Miss Stephens £20 a week. All these actors were first-rate. But looking down the list we find Macready, in 1839, receiving £25 a night; Power (1840), £120 a week! Farren, at the same period, £40 a week. Liston, who began at £17 a week, ended by receiving £20 a night; and Miss Ellen Tree, "certainly a pretty and popular actress, was engaged by the Drury Lane manager, when lessee of both theatres, to play at both for £15 a week. She then went to America, returned after two seasons, and even after this rustication she comes, demands, and even actually obtains £25 a night!" The same writer says that, were it not for these heavy demands upon the treasury of the management, the dramatic author would receive larger sums for his plays; and instances the money paid to authors in the days of Kemble and Suett by quoting Colman, who received £1,000 for John Bull; Morton, £1,000 for Town and Country; Mrs. Inchbald, £800 for Wives as they Were; and Reynolds, for two works in one season (The Blind Bargain and Out of Place), £1,000.

TRIALS WITH A TELEPHONE.

"No. 999," one of the articles included in Mr. Edward Turner's book, which has recently been published by Smith, Elder and Co., is a good example of the humorous recitation. The above numerals, says the writer, do not represent the inscription on my front door, or my distinguishing mark at Portland, or an uncivil cabman whose card I have demanded—but my Telephone Number.

I was very proud of it at first. I had it printed on my note-paper, I mentioned it to my friends, and regarded the telephone as a splendid invention, and to me, personally, a mighty convenience and facility in business.

Mind, I don't say it is not so even now. I only wish to remark that it is not an unmixed blessing, and that I am the dancing, running, grovelling slave of that instrument from 9.30 a.m. to 6.30 p.m. You see there is no toying with it. When it begins to buzz, I have to go to it immediately if I don't want to be buzzed mad, because it won't stop till I do go: and whether I am writing something that needs all my little stock of brains, or am in the middle of a most confidential interview—it is all the same.

Imagine this sort of thing:—

Me (giving advice in my most expressive tones): "I have thought most anxiously over the matter, and, in my opinion, your best course will be"—

Telephone: Buzz-zz-zz-zz-zz-zz-zz—

Me: "Excuse me one moment while I just speak to some one at the telephone."

I go to the telephone, and find that it has been set in motion by my wife at the Civil Service Stores in sheer wantonness of mischief, and that she is sniggering at the other end as she asks me how I am. I dismiss her with a dignified rebuke, which loses some of its majesty because of my inability to make her appreciate the tone in which it is uttered, and resume.

"As I was about to say, I think your best course will be to write Jones—"

Telephone: Buzz-zz-zz-zz-zz-zz-zz-zz—

Me: "Pray forgive me for a minute, but I hear the telephone again."

I return to the instrument, and identify as the assailant Brown, who asks me whether I shall be in at four. I tell him that I shall, and retrace my steps.

"I was just remarking that after very anxious consideration I see nothing for it but a letter to Jones to the effect—"

Telephone: Buzz-zz-zz-zz-zz-zz-zz-zz—

Me: "I must really apologise for the interruption, but there is some one else at the telephone."

I go back once more to the telephone and inquire who it is. Answer: "Are you No. 979?" Reply: "No, I am No. 999." Rejoinder: "Then they've put me on to the wrong number."

Once more I begin.

"As I just pointed out, the matter is an extremely anxious one, and I have left great difficulty in coming to a conclusion, but on the whole—"

Telephone: Buzz-zz-zz-zz-zz-zz-zz-zz-zz—

Me: "I am really very sorry, but there is somebody at the telephone again."

I am about to rise, but my visitor can stand it no longer, and fells me to the earth with his umbrella in a passion. So I don't go to the telephone that time.

From various causes my telephone does not always render a conversation very distinctly. Sometimes the gentleman at the other end speaks too near to the instrument, in which case I hear sounds which seem to indicate that he is trying to swallow a baked potato at one mouthful. Sometimes he speaks too far from the instrument, in which case I hear nothing Sometimes the wire gets in contact with another wire, and then I get a mixture of what my friend is saying to me, and some one else's friend is saying to him, and am left in uncertainty as to whether Robinson wishes to see me about an important matter of legal business, or is anxious to know my views on the subject of pig iron or shirting.

I am not naturally selfish, but I could wish to keep my telephone a little more to myself. I don't mean that I want to talk at both ends; but that it is occasionally put to irreverent use by young and frivolous persons associated with me. I can best illustrate this by another example.

I am pouring out stores of wisdom to a client, and he is hanging upon my every word.

Me: "I base my conclusions upon three grounds: First—I think it is clear—"

Preternaturally Distinct Voice of an articled clerk at the telephone in the next room: "Have you got three good Dress Circles in the front row for Thursday night?"

Me: "I think it is clear—"

Same Voice: "Well, then, can I have them for Tuesday?"

Me: "Clear—"

Same Voice: "Are they in the middle?"

Me: "I say quite clear—"

Same Voice: "Then why the dickens didn't you say so?"

Up to this point my visitor and I have listened to these remarks in a kind of stupor; but his face gradually assumes an expression of gentle reproach, as if to say, "I really was not aware that you kept a Box Office." I smile a sickly smile, and say, in faltering tones, that I rather think I hear a voice at the telephone. I leave the room, and when I get outside—well, I won't say what happens, because a man is presumed to be innocent until he is proved to be guilty, and they have never been able to bring home to me the death of the young articled clerk who was last seen alive when he went to the telephone that day, though I have always been suspected.

The myrmidons whose duty it is to place me in communication, through the telephone, with other people, and other people with me, are evidently of opinion that brevity is the soul of wit, for they wax very impatient if my conversation is at all prolonged, and interpose frequently in the middle of it with the inquiry—"Have you finished?" to which I reply in tones of asperity, which increase with every repetition, "No!" The following conveys some faint idea of how the interview might be taken down by a shorthand writer, if he were able to catch the words without distinguishing the voices:

"I wanted to tell you that I called on Souser yesterday, and he seemed quite willing to—Have you finished? No!—act with us; but he wished to be quite clear that we were at one with him, and he said—Have you finished? No!—he would put down his ideas in writing for our consideration; and I replied to this—Have you finished? NO!—that it was a very good idea, and we would consider his memorandum carefully, and let him know as soon as possible whether it expressed our views also, and he added—Have you finished? NO!—that he should be quite willing to guarantee all expenses up to the limit of—Have you finished? NO!—but I assured him that we did not require this, and our only anxiety was—Have you finished? NO!"

At this point I have grown purple with rage at the repeated interruptions; and the attendants on their side feel that I am presuming too far on their good nature. So they cut me off in my prime—telephonically—and Jones remains listening at the other end; but never another syllable does he hear, for the very sufficient reason that my telephone and his are no longer on speaking terms.

I should like, in conclusion, just to mention—I am sure I beg your pardon, but my telephone is buzzing furiously, and I really must go to it. I will be back in the next leaf.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

[We cannot undertake to answer the inquiries of correspondents by post. In all letters names and addresses must be given as a guarantee of good faith. Initials only or pseudonyms will be used in the replies if so desired.]

H. Guillaume.—You will find full directions given in Strong's "Law of Copyright" on all the points mentioned in your letter.

J. M. G.—His Excellency the Governor was produced at the Court Theatre, on June 11, 1898.

X. Y. Z.—If the novel is not already dramatised no consent is necessary. But the Little Lord Fauntleroy case lays it down that if the very words of the novel are taken and copied for the purposes of rehearsal this may be an infringement of the author's copyright.

C. Avery.—The New Albion Theatre ceased to be a dramatic house in the year 1880, when it was called the Queen's Arms Palace of Varieties by Mr. Fred Abrahams. This title was shortened to the Queen's Palace, Poplar, in 1882 or thereabouts. You might glean further particulars concerning the hall by writing to Mr. Fred Abrahams, c/o Queen's Palace, Paplar, E. See notice above.

Nemo.—Try French's, Southampton-street, Strand. Charles Kean played Louis the Eleventh in an adaptation of Casimir Delavigne's play at the Princess's on Jan. 13, 1855; Henry Irving, March 9, 1878. We only know of the character of Charles the First appearing in one play, that by W. G. Wills, produced by Henry Irving, at the Lyceum, on Sept. 28, 1872. In Cromwell, by Colonel A. B. Richards, produced in December of the same year, the "martyred King" was only seen in a vision. George Rignold played the great Ironside.

AMUSEMENTS IN AUSTRALIA.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

SYDNEY, Sept. 29, 1908.—Mr. J. C. Williamson sent away Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch from Her Majesty's, and replaced her with The Merry Widow. The first night saw a packed house, hundreds having waited outside all the afternoon. The bright book and melodious music captured the audience as nothing else has done for long since, and Mr. Victor Gouriet made a most auspicious entrée into Sydney. He is a genuine comedian of the crusted port kind—rich and racy without effort, funny in perfect unconsciousness of his funniness. His Baron Popoff is a rare treat. Another newcomer is Mr. Andrew Higginson, a clever actor, singer, elocutionist, and dancer, as Prince Danilo. The musical success of the night was made by Miss Florence Young, and her Natalie was superb, and some are inquiring why she was not cast for Sonia? Mr. W. S. Percy was Nisch, a creation which did the clever comedian infinite credit. Mr. Reginald Roberts was Jolidon, and sang the music like an artist; Mr. E. Nable was the tear-dropping Baron; and Mr. George Castles played a small part, M. le St. Brioche; and the ever-genial Claude Bancock made the most of the Marquis of Cascada. The scenery was beautifully painted by Mr. John Gordon, and Mr. Williamson put on a gorgeously-dressed chorus.

Mr. Frank Thornton has revived Charley's Aunt at the Palace under Mr. Edwin Geach's direction. The farewelling comedian looks younger than ever, and acts with all his old finesse. He is amply helped by Mr. Douglas Hamilton and Mr. Harry Ashford (Chesney and Spettigue) and Miss Harriett Trench as Donna Lucia.

"Peter Pan" will run until Oct. 2, and the next night the Theatre Royal will see a revival of Dorothy Vernon, for which Mr. J. C. Williamson has engaged Mrs. Robert Brough, Miss Emma Temple, and Mr. Thomas Kingston to join Miss Tittell Brune in the principal rôles.

The Tivoli is crammed every night, the star attraction being Abdullah's troupe of Arabs, whose performances have created quite a furore in the city. The Barnard Family, Mr. and Mrs. H. Meymott, Austin Rudd, Burt Shepard, Fanny Powers, Nita Leete, the Four Rosebuds, Rochfort and Hart, and several other artists up to the Harry Rickards's standard, are participators in a most attractive programme.

Miss Ada Crossley is here, and the combined musical societies of the city invited a large concourse of musical and social entities to give her a public welcome yesterday at the Town Hall. The place was packed in the unmannerly way so peculiar to Sydney, and speeches were made by the representatives of the societies. The tour is under Mr. J. C. Williamson's direction, with Mr. Henry Bracy as manager.

Mr. Adam Cowan, one of the most popular theatrical and concert managers in Australia, died suddenly in a private hospital on the 26th, and was buried in Waverley Cemetery yesterday. The funeral was attended by many men prominent in theatrical matters, the Rev. G. North Ash performing the burial ceremony. Mr. Cowan is deeply lamented by all who ever knew him.

THE ACTORS' CHURCH UNION.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE ERA.

Sir,—The Actors' Church Union has proved itself a valuable and agreeable society, and by the many tactful services it has rendered—I don't refer to Church offices—it has substantiated its claim fully for a matinée. A noisy machine of any sort is becoming out of date: that the Actors' Church Union works on with silent tyres is surely no reason against its machinery being renewed. Many leading members of the profession have seen fit to support my friend, the Rev. Stephen Barrass, and myself in organising this matinée, and I shall have the pleasure of shortly publishing a valuable list of patrons, including many well-known people, who also seem to think the Society worthy of consideration.—Yours faithfully,

J. MAUNDY-GREGORY.

BIRTHS, MARRIAGES, & DEATHS.

The charge for inserting in "The Era" an announcement of a Birth, a Marriage, or a Death, or an "In Memoriam" notice, not exceeding twenty-four words, is One Shilling and Sixpence.

WHEN Catalini visited Hamburg, Schevenke, the chief musician there, criticised her somewhat severely. She answered by abusing him roundly, saying, "When God has given to a mortal such marvellous talent as I possess, people ought to applaud and honour it as a miracle, and it is a sin to depreciate such a gift from heaven."

"Merry and Bright."

"Let's have it merry and bright" never fails to put you on your mettle so long as there's an ounce of energy left in your body.

But when you are "off-colour"—exhausted with rehearsals or travelling, or "worn out" by the strain of "playing" night after night—the appeal is apt to pall.

The spirit is willing, but the jaded body refuses any longer to be goaded to the semblance of health.

Then it is that many resort to the temporary aid of stimulants, rather than prove guilty of "letting the show down."

But helpful as the practice is for the moment, it does but let one down the more afterwards.

What you want is not a mere stimulant, but a permanent exhilarant—Hall's Wine.

Free from the headiness, after-depression, and other objectionable features of ordinary stimulants, Hall's Wine does yet instantly revive you, and enable you to meet the most exacting managerial standard of "Merry and Bright."

Hall's Wine

The Marvellous Restorative.

And its restorative effects are still more marked in the speedy overthrow of all nervous, anæmic, digestive, and bronchial disorders, so commonly resulting from impoverished blood.

The reason? Simply that Hall's Wine makes new, rejuvenating blood; and that, of course, imparts new life to your body, new tone to your nerves, new verve to your brain—in fact, all the health and energy you have, have had, or ever will have.

Whether you are run down—in danger of "letting it down" or simply particularly anxious to "let it be merry and bright" to-night, just try Hall's Wine to-day.

You will then know where safety lies in the future.

The 3/6 size bottle for 3/- is now larger than ever. Try just one large bottle. It will do you more good than three bottles of any other tonic wine. Hall's Wine is sold by grocers and chemists with wine licences, and by wine merchants everywhere, or direct from Hall's Wine, 902, Bow, London.

THE ERA

A UNIFORM LICENCE.

Mr. WALTER REYNOLDS, L.C.C., is indeed an interesting personality. Like Mr. A. E. W. MASON, the member for Coventry, he has been an actor, and in 1875 played the Count de Rochefort, an emissary of Richelieu's, in a version of The Three Musketeers, finishing up the evening with a performance of Abel Quick in the farce of A Regular Fix. He was also seen as Gabriel in Guy Mannering, as Captain Dudley Smooth in Money, and as Alcibiades in The Marble Heart; or, The Sculptor's Dream, and he enacted the wicked squire in Eileen Oge; or, Dark's the Hour before the Dawn. He was the Benvolio to Miss WALLIS'S Juliet, and also played Sir Rowland Trenchard in the Strand burlesque of Little Jack Sheppard. Then he became a manager and a playwright; and finally one of the "shining lights" of the London County Council.

The "chat" with Mr. REYNOLDS, which we print elsewhere, on the motion which has been placed on the agenda of the Council by Mr. JOCELYN BRANDON is extremely interesting. And the time chosen for the proposal of the alteration is quite opportune. Whenever the theatres have been doing badly—the result, as we have often pointed out, of unattractive entertainments—the blame has been thrown upon the music-halls, with their "advantages" in the way of smoking and drinking. The present theatrical season is notoriously prosperous, the result of a remarkable "output" of clever pieces, and a vigorous search for rising talent by managemesses and managers. The admission into the productive circle of Mr. W. SOMERSET MAUGHAM and Mr. ROY HORNIMAN, and the adherence to the employment of Mr. J. M. BARRIE, Mr. JEROME K. JEROME, Mr. HALL CAINE, Mr. HUBERT HENRY DAVIES, and other provedly expert playwrights, has had its natural effect. As an instance of the way in which managers are inspired by necessity to assist our playwrights, we may point to the genesis of The Flag Lieutenant. Each of those clever authors, Major W. P. DRURY and Mr. LEO TREVOR, was writing a play intended for Mr. CYRIL MAUDE. He conceived the idea of a collaboration, and persuaded the two dramatists to join forces; and the result was the triumphantly successful naval drama now being presented to full houses at the Playhouse. The prosperity of the dramatic stage depends upon the power of its attraction, not on the presence or absence of "variety" competition. When a dull piece is produced at a theatre, the people who would have gone to that establishment do not revenge themselves by going to a music-hall. They simply spend the money in some other way. The restriction as to smoking, in theatres under the authority of the County Council, has made no serious difference in the constitution of the audiences at these houses. Competition in amusements is a mere "bogey," invented by the inexpert and unenterprising to account for their ill-success. We have had two Exhibitions open in London this season; and yet the theatres, taking them all round, have seldom done better business.

The adoption of a "uniform licence" would certainly make our arrangements more logical. Our present arrangements work smoothly, on account of the excellent understanding which exists between the Lord Chamberlain and the County Council. But it is always better to avoid anomalies, if they can be removed without causing any inconvenience. As Mr. REYNOLDS says, there is at present no power which would enable a "uniform licence" to be granted in London. That object could only be attained by granting two licences, one for music and dancing and one for dramatic performances. The present situation has settled down into general satisfaction. It has been discovered that the music-hall patron was not to be turned into a playgoer by allowing him to smoke, and that the lover of variety would not tolerate anything more than what we may term a "pressed-meat sandwich" of drama, or a boiled-down farce of a kind not now produced at a playhouse. The music-halls have taken just the part of a theatrical entertainment which is useless to the theatre, and have given temporary employment to excellent actors out of work. But trouble is caused, or was caused until lately, by the uncertainty which was created by our anomalous arrangements. As Mr. REYNOLDS says, before recent rulings in the case of the Camden Theatre and the Empress, Brixton, an impression prevailed in many quarters that the Lord Chamberlain's licence covered everything in London, so that a man who held this licence could play whatever he liked in his own building. This idea has been completely upset. As Mr. REYNOLDS pithily puts it: "We refused the Empress management a music and dancing licence. They immediately obtained an unrestricted licence from the Lord Chamberlain, but when the Lord Chamberlain discovered that his regulations were being violated—in such ways, for instance, as the presentation of an unlicensed programme and the permission to smoke—he withdrew his licence. When the Camden Theatre was turned over to the Gibbons Syndicate, the management of it gave music-hall performances under the Lord Chamberlain's licence, which Mr. ARTHUR already held. The London County Council did not interfere. The Lord Chamberlain did not interfere. But the outside public stepped in and invoked the 'protection' of the Act of Parliament, and the Court decided that the premises must not be kept open for music and dancing without a music and dancing licence. The Camden Theatre and the Brixton Empress had to deal with two different authorities, and between the two stools they fell." Mr. REYNOLDS, on the 28th ult., put the following motion on the agenda of the Council: "That it be referred to the General Purposes Committee and the Theatres and Music Halls Committee to consider and report as to the advisability of providing, by an amendment of standing orders or otherwise, for music or music and dancing licences to be granted, as in the case of stage plays licences, at any time during the year." This is a mere act of justice, and cannot long be postponed.

The masterly manner in which Mr. REYNOLDS sums up the situation, and his action in all matters connected with amusement, shows the advantage of having on the County Council a gentleman practically acquainted with, and experienced in, the working of a theatre. Half the trouble that used to arise between the County Council and the managers was created by ignorance of the subject in those in authority.

A FLYING matinée of Madame Butterfly was given by the Moody-Manners Opera Co. at the Empire Theatre, Swindon, on Saturday. A hearty reception was accorded Mr. Charles Carter as B. F. Pinkerton, and Miss Enriqueta Crichton was enthusiastically applauded for her rendering of the title-part. Mr. Charles Moorhouse was in fine voice as Sharples, and Goro was ably taken by Mr. R. Brookes. Miss M. Dennis gave a clever impersonation of Susuki. The minor characters were in capable hands, the chorus excellent, and the augmented orchestra admirable.

After a run of 225 performances at the Théâtre des Arts, Paris, where it was produced on Dec. 22, 1907, Le Grand Soir, through the enterprise of Miss Andrews, has come to Terry's from la ville lumière, and is being played in the Strand by those actors and actresses who have been associated with its success across the Channel. The piece is a series of dramatic pictures that quicken the pulses of the most blasé playgoer. So cleverly written is it, and so admirably is it acted that immediately on the rising of the curtain we take a supreme interest in the aims and ambitions of Russia's educated thinkers. We are impressed deeply by their firm faith in a free Russia, and we become supremely interested in the day-dreams of the preachers of the gospel of murder as a panacea for the official assassination of patriots.

In the garret of the fierce and uncompromising Anton is printed secretly the revolutionary organ The Light. The press is working in a small outhouse—seemingly a storehouse for empty boxes—while the women, Sofia (Anton's wife) and Masha, are folding the sheets in the inner apartment. Two other members of the society are expected—Vasili, who is bringing a passport for Tantale, an escaped prisoner hiding in Anton's apartment, and Anna, who helps to circulate The Light. Vasili is in love with Anna, but dares not confess his love, for he feels that she is devoted to the Cause, to the exclusion of all personal feelings. Anton lives in a continual dread of a visit from the police. Soon after the departure of Vasili and Anna his apprehensions are confirmed. There is a loud knocking at the door, and the police proceed to force an entrance. Rather than fall into their hands a second time Tantale shoots himself. The gendarmes enter, seize the press and some copies and place Anton and his companions under arrest. The captain of the party reads sarcastically the title of the paper. "La Lumière!" says he, "eh, mon ami, la lumière est soufflée!"

In the second act, at a meeting of Nihilist students Vasili is present. A great pacific demonstration of students and artisans is arranged for that afternoon; they are to meet at different churches, and to march through the streets singing hymns. It is agreed that the Governor shall be killed by a bomb the following day if he orders the soldiers to interfere. Vasili begs for the privilege of throwing the bomb, for he feels that he can no longer be a true brother to the Cause on account of his love for Anna. Anna has been in hiding since the discovery of the printing press and the arrest of her unfortunate companions. Impelled by a desire to see Vasili she ventures out to meet him. They mutually confess their love, and are stirred to fresh enthusiasm by hearing the people singing. For many of them it is a song of death! The cruel shots ring out, and the swelling anthem of freedom is drowned by the groans of the wounded and dying and the indignant shouts of those who would avenge their comrades.

The Governor, who has ordered this wholesale murder, must die, and Vasili is to be his executioner. The patriot rushes to the window, and in his agony cries aloud, "Assassins!" Man and woman in their unutterable grief are for a time silent. Vasili knows within himself that the Cossack volley is his own death knell; that love is over for him; and that the beautiful girl who soothes him with her endearments and would hush his sobs like those of a child must be given up for the Cause. In the last act Anna, who has taken refuge with her aunt, agrees to give her lover the signal when the Governor is leaving the opera. From her window she can see the door of the Opera House, where there is to be a special fête, and if the Governor's carriage departs from that door she must hold up the lamp. Anna feels she has not strength enough to send the man she loves to his death, but the love of the woman is absorbed in devotion to the Cause, and she overcomes her hesitation, grasps the lamp, and holds it up before the window. An explosion follows; the bomb has been thrown; and the girl, with uplifted hands and a transport of emotion, declaims the battle cry of the Cause.

Such acting as that of M. Karl Roger and Mlle. Vera Sergine is rare on any stage. The voice of the actress, a queenly figure, vibrates with passion, and in the great scene of the second act she is inexpressibly tender. Mlle. Sergine should add lustre to the Paris stage, and we hope to see her again. M. Karl Roger is natural and forcible as Vasili; and the other parts were all well filled, the ensemble being excellent.

In front of the principal piece is given the comedy, in one act, by Robert de Flers and G. Caillavet, entitled

"LE CŒUR A SES RAISONS."

Jacques Artenay	M. SAVOY
Lucien de Jullianges	M. SAULIEU
Françoise Vernières	MLLE. SUZANNE THERAY
Une Femme de Chambre	MLLE. HELENE FLORISE

Jacques Artenay is bashful and retiring; he has been in love with Françoise Vernières for some time, but has not dared to tell her so. He calls at her house and meets there his friend Lucien de Jullianges, for whose tact and knowledge of the fair sex he has a great admiration; he begs him to plead his cause with Françoise, and arranges that if the result is successful, Lucien, on his return, shall hand him one glove; if not, both gloves. Like Miles Standish, Lucien takes the opportunity to press his own suit, and arranges to take Françoise out to dinner and to the Opera. The lady, when left alone with Jacques, is touched by his excessive modesty. She encourages him and extracts a proposal, and when Lucien returns informs him she has decided to spend the evening with Jacques. The latter, delighted with his success, borrows money from the exasperated Lucien to pay for the dinner with Françoise. The chief success is scored by MM. Savoy and Saulieu in the rôles of Jacques and Lucien.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

PARIS, THURSDAY, Oct. 29.—If pungent spices are sufficient to make a farce a success, M. Ordonneau's L'Heure de la Bergère is likely to have a long run, for it contains enough cayenne-pepper to suit the palate of the most case-hardened frequenter of the Palais-Royal Theatre. The risqué plot is as follows:—René Froberville is what is called here un homme à bonnes fortunes—in plain English, a lady-killer. His conquests are numerous, and he is aided in his love adventures by François, his old valet, who, having suffered conjugal misfortunes, delights in seeing other husbands meet with the same fate. When the story opens René has just entered into a liaison with a young woman he met in the underground railway, who has refused to tell him her name. René discovers, by accident, that the fair incognita is no other than Mme. Sabourdin, whereupon, to the lady's astonishment, he at once tells her to leave his rooms. Sabourdin was one of his former chums. The lady has scarcely left him when he comes across a charming young milliner. She is quite willing to throw herself into René's arms; but—oh, horror!—she is Sabourdin's mistress, and he packs her off as he did Mme, Sabourdin. René then thinks of marriage. He has fallen in love with a Mrs. Blossom, and wants her to become his wife. Mrs. Blossom is the widow of an American. The latter, many years her senior, gave her very few of the joys of life; and the young widow has sworn not to embark again on matrimony except with a man who will not walk in the late Mr. Blossom's footsteps. But the interesting widow feels neurasthenic, and goes to Lucerne to take a rest "cure" in the establishment of Dr. Brugg, an idiotic old doctor. René, of course, follows her, to the disgust of François, who does not want his master to renounce bachelorhood. René meets Mrs. Blossom. She is fascinated by him, and promises to become his wife provided he proves himself an ideal husband. And here I must draw a veil over the scenes that follow. Sufficient to say that Mrs. Blossom has at first serious doubts about René, but that these doubts are ultimately set at rest, and she changes her name to that of Mme. Froberville. The naughty farce was capitally played. M. Le Gallo's drolleries evoked much laughter; M. Charles Lamy was equally funny as François; Mlle. Yrven gave a delightful portrait of Rose, the servant in love with her master; and the other parts were most satisfactorily taken by MM. Hurteaux and Diamand, and Mmes. Guitty, Dickson, Evian, and Pierval.

"ARSENE LUPIN,"

Play, in Three Acts and Four Tableaux, by MM. F. de Croisset and M. Leblanc, produced at the Athénée on Oct. 28.

Le Duc de Chamerace	M. ANDRE BRULE
Gournay-Martin	M. BULLIER
Guerchard	M. ESCOFFIER
Le Juge d'Instruction	M. ANDRE LEFAUR
Le Commissaire	M. NARBAL
Sonia Kritchnof	MLLE. LAURENCE DULUC
Germaine	MLLE. JEANNE ROSNY
Victoire	MLLE. GERMAINE ETY
Jeanne	MLLE. MAUD GAUTHIER

The plot of this play hinges on the performances of Arsène Lupin, an expert thief. Arsène has made the acquaintance of the rich young Duc de Chamerace, whom he accompanies on an expedition to the South Pole. The Duc dies on the journey, whereupon Arsène not only appropriates that gentleman's papers, but on his return to Paris passes himself off as the Duc, whom he resembles closely. Arsène sells the Duc's country mansion with its furniture and rare works of art to Gournay-Martin, a millionaire parvenu, and engages himself to that man's daughter, Germaine. The wedding draws near, and costly presents are pouring into the Château de Chamerace. It is discovered that a valuable pendant is missing, and the thief is no other than Sonia, a Russian girl, Gournay-Martin's secretary. Sonia has fallen in love with Arsène, who has also lost his heart to her; and his next exploit is to save the girl from the clutches of the police. Three years before the story begins thieves broke into the ex-Duc's country mansion, and this time Gournay-Martin receives a telegram informing him that his Paris house will be visited by burglars. When, however, Gournay-Martin and his family hurry back to the capital to protect their property, they find the place already ransacked. The robbery creates a tremendous sensation; yet neither the idiotic Juge d'Instruction nor the equally silly Police Commissary can throw any light upon the affair. It is then that Guerchard comes upon the scene. Guerchard is an experienced detective. By clever deduction he arrives at the truth, and in an amusing scene expresses his doubts to Arsène as to his being the Duc de Chamerace. He wants to arrest him, but Arsène escapes, and Guerchard starts hunting the criminal, who continually gives him the slip. At last Guerchard is fortunate enough to pounce upon his quarry in the latter's apartment. The overjoyed detective promptly clasps the handcuffs on his prisoner; but Arsène frees his hands and escapes with his beloved Sonia by a patent lift, cunningly concealed behind a wardrobe. And virtue is triumphant, because Arsène, sick and tired of being a criminal, wants to lead an honest life. The work was spiritedly played by a good all-round cast.

"L'EVEIL DU PRINTEMPS" is the title of a very curious play brought out at the Théâtre des Arts. It is by M. Wedekind, the well-known German author, and is called by him "a tragedy of adolescence," showing us young boys and girls striving to penetrate into the mysteries of life, which, on their part, leads to terrible results. The object of the play is to show the mistakes of laws made by society and the necessity of opening children's eyes to the laws of Nature. The introduction of two gloomy cemetery scenes jarred somewhat on the audience, but the work is decidedly clever, although it is more suitable to be read than to be performed on the stage.

"LE PASSE-PARTOUT,"

Comedy, in Three Acts, by M. Georges Thurner, Produced at the Gymnase on Oct. 30.

PARIS, THURSDAY, Nov. 5.—In Le Passe-Partout the author, M. Georges Thurner, portrays scenes from the life of a great French newspaper, which pleased the audience, who received the work very warmly. Lionel Régis is the proprietor and editor of the Passe-Partout, a huge blackmailing sheet. Selfish and unscrupulous, he does not offer the slightest help to his struggling family. Yet his sister Henriette is eking out a scanty living as a shop girl, and his brother Eugène has been compelled to accept a post as clerk to M. Brézin, a shady financier. In the opening act Jacqueline Helloin, a young widow, arrives from Limoges to seek employment in Paris. She has been recommended to the Régis family, and Lionel engages her as secretary. But M. Brézin discovers accidentally that Eugène is the brother of Lionel, the notorious blackmailer, and he discharges the luckless Eugène, who deplores that Lionel's shocking reputation should blight the happiness of those connected with him. The second act takes place in the offices of the Passe-Partout; and here the public are initiated into what purports to be the inner working of a great modern newspaper. We witness some strange practices as regards the manufactory of articles that are to appear. Brézin is announced. Smarting under the attacks of the Passe-Partout, he has come to horsewhip Lionel. But the worthy couple soon come to terms. The financier pays two thousand pounds to the paper, and the two men shake hands. Thus far Lionel has only taken little notice of Jacqueline. Suddenly he declares his passion to her, and the young widow, fascinated and bewildered, consents to become his mistress. Fortunately for her, Eugène arrives at this critical moment. He warns her against his brother and asks her to become his wife. Jacqueline, evidently the slave of the last speaker, promises to leave the paper, and asks for a little time to reflect on Eugène's marriage proposal. When Lionel hears that Jacqueline has gone away he flies into a terrible rage, and in a violent scene Eugène overwhelms him with well-deserved reproaches. The two brothers are even on the point of coming to blows, but Lionel, in a rather sudden fit of repentance, sees the error of his ways. He will now devote himself to the happiness of his family and befriend Eugène, who becomes the husband of Jacqueline. In the rôle of the wicked Lionel M. Dumény played with his accustomed skill; M. Dubosc was a convincing Eugène; M. Leubas very cleverly impersonated Brézin; Mlle. Marthe Regnier was a most fascinating Jacqueline; and the minor rôles were also excellently sustained.

THE old fairy play La Chatte Blanche has been revived at the Théâtre du Châtelet. Brought out in the year 1854 at the Théâtre Impérial, it had a phenomenal run in the days of the Second Empire, when, if I am not mistaken, that charming actress Mlle. Céline Montaland played the rôle of Blanchette. The work, of course, has been modernised, but it nevertheless has retained a rather antiquated flavour, and drags considerably in certain parts. Violente, a wicked fairy, wants Blanchette, the young heroine, to marry the ugly king, Mignonnet. Blanchette's lover, Pimpondor, intervenes, whereupon the king has the youth thrust into a cage to remain imprisoned for life. Blanchette, disguised as the Prince Fidèle, wants to release him. Aided by her faithful followers, she arrives, after many adventures, at the king's palace and runs away with Pimpondor. But they do not run far. The wicked fairy changes Blanchette into a white cat, whilst her lover is thrown into the sea. He is, of course, miraculously saved, and finds his way back to his father's palace. It is now his turn to rescue Blanchette, and he does it by chopping off the head of the white cat, whereupon Blanchette is at once transformed into a woman. They marry and live happily. The wicked king becomes the husband of the fairy Violente, but their union turns out less successful. The work is not particularly well mounted, but it seemed to please the easily-amused audience.

WE may expect several lawsuits in the course of the next month. The most important among them will be the action brought by M. Samuel, manager of the Variétés, against M. Alfred Capus, the well-known playwright. The latter, it appears, undertook to write three plays for the before-mentioned theatre, the first of which was to have been delivered in the beginning of the present year. M. Samuel did not receive the manuscript he expected, and as M. Capus supplied another house with a new piece, M. Samuel is bringing this action, claiming £1,200 damages. M. Capus, on the other hand, says that M. Samuel, by reviving Les Deux Ecoles in January last, gave clearly to understand that he did not intend to wait for a new Capus play. But the playwright does not explain why he handed his last production, L'Oiseau Blessé, to the Renaissance. He says he will enter into that question when the case comes into court.

THE BELFAST BRANCH of the British Empire Shakespeare Society opened its season on Wednesday with a reading by Mr. J. H. Leigh, the well-known elocutionist, of The Merchant of Venice, given in the Ulster Minor Hall. Mr. Leigh gave a masterly exposition of the play, in the delivery of which some notes of originality were evident. At the conclusion of the reading a vote of thanks to Mr. Leigh, proposed by Professor Lindsay, was passed by acclamation.

THE ARGONAUTS are preparing a plethora of playlets, and on Friday afternoon next will give four one-act pieces at the Rehearsal Theatre, Maiden-lane. The programme will consist of The Renewal, by Ben Phillips (Miss Rosina Filippi), played by Miss Maud Magrath and Mr. Herbert Dansey; The Black Devil, by Carlo Broggi, represented by Miss Janet Alexander and Mr. Lauderdale Maitland; Jealousy, a pantomime arranged by Mme. Cavallazzi, and mimed by Miss Brozel and Mr. Ayrault; and An Action for Breach, by M. E. Francis, in which Miss Minnie Griffin and Mr. Fred Volpe will appear. The last-named will be produced by Mr. Duncan McRae.

IN the Court of Bankruptcy on the 30th ult., the public examination was held of Lawrence Christopher Rainbow, concert agent, described as of Pond-street, Hampstead. The debtor's statement of affairs showed liabilities £1,622 and assets £246. It appeared that the debtor in 1904 entered into partnership with another person in a concert agent's business. He was afterwards for many weeks prevented by serious illness from attending to business, and on his return he found that his partner had disposed of all the portable property and left the premises. The defendant had since been interested in other concert agencies, and attributed his failure to the disappearance of his late partner, want of capital, and other causes. The examination was concluded.

THE programme for the private performance at the New Theatre on Tuesday, Nov. 17, in aid of Miss Olive Christian Malvery's Shelter for Homeless and Destitute Women, is growing in interest. In addition to songs by Miss Marie George and Miss Ada Reeve, and recitations by Mr. Henry Ainley and Mrs. Beerbohm Tree, there will be several violin and pianoforte solos by Miss Bristol, Mr. Rousby Woof, Mr. L'Estrange, and Mr. Spencer Dyke; also songs by Miss Edith Dinorben. Miss Jean Aylwin will appear as Nell Gwynne in a one-act historical piece, with Mr. Charles Quartermaine as Charles II. and Miss Edyth Olive as the Duchess of Portsmouth. Miss Lewis, who has organised the matinée, will also give some little playlets on Scripture stories, in which Mr. John Napper, Mr. W. St. Auburn Bentley, Mr. Holliday Attley, Mr. Ned Llewelyn, Mr. Basil Osborne, Miss Beatrice Bevan, Miss Catherine Robertson, and Miss Pax Robertson will appear. Miss Olive Christian Malvery will add a few words on her "Experiences when walking the Embankment, disguised as a Tramp."

VARIETY GOSSIP.

THE London, Provincial, and Continental Vaudeville Combination, the latest combine, is the title that marks the linking up of the Gibbons and Barrasford enterprises. The co-managing directors are Mr. Walter Gibbons and Mr. Thomas Barrasford. The former gentleman will devote his attention to the London halls, and the latter, who has established English variety entertainments in Paris and Brussels, will have the chief control of the Continental and provincial halls.

THE new combine will open the Palladium, London (the new name for Hengler's Cirque), on or about August Bank Holiday, 1909; and another new establishment contemplated is the London Casino, which is announced to be opened at the end of November next year. The precise locality of this house is not yet to be revealed.

THE halls that are building that are the property of the new combine are the Ilford Hippodrome and the Kilburn Empire. When the contemplated new homes of vaudeville are erected the circuit will be spread over no fewer than thirty-two theatres. A new addition to the London Circuit of the combine is the Palace, Hammersmith, which has been successfully run as a one-man hall for several years by Mr. J. C. Coe, whose retirement—we hope it is but temporary—will cause much regret in professional circles. Eventually seventeen houses will form the London and suburban circuit of the Gibbons-Barrasford houses.

MISS VESTA VICTORIA, who is departing for America on Saturday next, has kindly consented to appear on Thursday at the matinée in aid of the Poor Children's Christmas Dinner Fund, which is being organised by Messrs. March and Co. She has generously given a cheque for ten guineas to the fund. Next week Miss Victoria will take a temporary farewell of London audiences at the Islington Empire and the Paragon.

A VERY pleasant function took place on Thursday evening at the Boulogne Hotel, viz., the first annual dinner of the Cranbourn Amateur Athletic Association, whose patrons are Sir Edward Moss and Oswald Stoll, Esq., and its popular president Frank Allen, Esq.

MR. ALLEN presided as chairman, and amongst those present were Messrs. W. S. Gordon Michie, Alan W. Young, Sam Gething, T. Gerald Morton, Albert Bulmer, John Christie, Hatton Wharton, A. Mitchell, B. G. Maclachlan, Chas. Wilson, L. Johns, H. Nokes, J. Hayman, W. Agnew, H. Cox, H. Mitchell, P. Wilde, G. V. O'Connolly, and W. Ward.

IN reply to the toast of "The Chairman," Mr. Allen in a neat speech dealt with the early days of the Empires in the North. He drew a comparison between the humble beginnings of the firm and the position is now holds—a position the greatest of its kind in the world. The secret of their success, he said, was that they were all "triers"—Sir Edward Moss, Mr. Stoll, and Mr. Thornton. And they were all "triers" still, and always would be. After the various toasts a short entertainment was provided by Mr. S. Gething, Mr. Wynne, and Mr. Maclachlan contributing songs, Mr. Sidney Lee, the "gay deceiver," a sleight-of-hand performance, Mr. Willie Bass, violin selections, and last, but not least, the Lady in Black, Russell Wallett, sang funny ditties.

M. EDOUARD ESPINOSA is already busy in inventing ingenious arrangements for the ballet scenes in the Lyceum Christmas production of Little Red Riding Hood. There will be some startling surprises in Toy-land. Miss Dorothy Craske, who was so successful last year as Robinson Crusoe, will again play principal boy, and Miss Frances Cameron, who has been appearing in America as the Merry Widow, will play principal girl. A comic part is to be given to Julian Rose, also from America. He is a genial Hebrew whose patter has made him an immense favourite at the music halls on this side. He made his London début back in the summer at the Coliseum.

THE removal of Will Oliver from the familiar Spot Lodge, Brixton-road, after close on twenty years' occupation, is notified in our columns today. Will now requires more suitable accommodation, which he believes he has found at his new address, 28, Trent-road, Brixton Hill, S.W., which he desires all and sundry to make a note of. He will be much missed in the Brixton-road.

THE Middlesex anniversary is one of the few celebrations of the kind that are left to us; and while the popular "Jimmy" Graydon, the pioneer of lightning entertainments, holds control of the historic Drury-lane establishment we should be sorry to hear of its discontinuance. There will be mirth and merriment and conviviality from early eve to the witching hour of midnight.

MME. ALBANI, in the course of a few weeks, will grace the boards of a variety theatre, the distinguished Canadian singer having just signed a contract to appear for a fortnight at the Pavilion, Glasgow. For her fortnight's services Mme. Albani will be paid £1,000. The famous singer hopes to appear at vaudeville houses in other large towns.

THE concert hall which it is proposed to erect at Tooting on the east side of the High-street will have accommodation for about 1,440 persons. The plans of Messrs. Emden, Egan, and Co. have been approved, and the promoters of the scheme intend applying for a music and dancing licence.

MISS MARGARET PARKER, the well-known sketch comedienne, was quietly married at Christ Church, Woburn-square, on the 30th ult., to Mr. Herbert Harden, of Tavistock-place, W.C., a member of her company. The happy couple are spending a short honeymoon at Brighton. The bride will not retire from the stage, as she holds contracts with Mr. Oswald Stoll that extend into 1910.

LA MILO is this week paying a visit to the Middlesbrough Hippodrome, and in order to satisfy themselves as to the character of her performance a number of the Licensing Justices witnessed a special performance on Monday afternoon. At its conclusion, after a brief consultation, the Mayor (Colonel Poole) announced that the justices were absolutely unanimous that it was one of the finest shows they had ever seen, and they were surprised that anyone could take exception to it.

GUNNER MOIR, the champion of England, is prepared to accept a limited number of engagements to produce his grand pictorial and boxing entertainment, including his unique representation of his great fight with Tommy Burns. His exhibition boxing is superbly staged, with an elaborate set of heavy silk curtains, sashes, trophies, white and gold ring, &c. His business is in the hands of George Manning, of 169, Stamford-street, S.E.

The Variety Artists' Federation received on Saturday a reply to the ultimatum which they had issued to Mr. Walter de Frece regarding the action of the management of the De Frece circuit of ten halls in inserting in contracts with artists a clause stipulating that the management should retain 10 per cent. of the salary as commission payable to the agents. The Federation had demanded from Mr. de Frece the deletion of the clause, and received the reply that he would agree, under protest, "that the clause to which you refer shall be taken out of all contracts issued from this office."

THE opening date of the new Hippodrome, Rochdale, has been altered to the 16th.

THE new Palace, Oldham, is to open on Monday. Two houses nightly will be the order of the day, and popular prices will rule. Mr. Fred Thorne, the resident manager, has already engaged a full working staff, and patrons will be welcomed with every courtesy. Messrs. Will Sley and Walter De Frece are the directors, and the house will be run in conjunction with the De Frece circuit.

MR. WILLIAM MOULD, lessee and manager of the Central Palace, North Shields, was elected a councillor for the Dockwray Ward of the Tynemouth Council on Monday last.

Mr. D. J. Clarke, the much-esteemed manager of the Argyle Theatre of Varieties, Birkenhead, was a candidate for municipal honours at the recent elections in that town in the Conservative interest. It speaks volumes for his popularity that he was triumphantly returned by a handsome majority.

AN experiment will be made at the Royal County Theatre on Monday, when Mr. Peter Davey will commence a series of high-class variety entertainments on the "two-houses-a-night" principle. A big star company has been engaged for the first week.

HIS EXCELLENCY the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland has been pleased to appoint Charles A. James, Town Councillor of Washington Hall, Merrion, co. Dublin, and proprietor of World's Fair Varieties, Henry-street, Dublin, to his Majesty's Commission of the Peace for the Borough of Dublin.

MR. F. W. FITT, manager of the Hippodrome, Norwich, was returned by a good majority as councillor for the Ber-street Ward of that city on Monday last. Much opposition was brought to bear against his candidature, and since his return congratulations have poured in from both sides. On the day of the election Mrs. Fitt, to secure her husband's return, made strennous efforts, in which Miss Dorothy Fitt assisted.

AT a "smoker" held at the Lawrenson Hotel, Hartlepool, on Saturday evening, Mr. Charlie Ferrier was the recipient of a handsome gold watch and a purse of gold, the gift of the many patrons of the Empress Theatre, Hartlepool, where his geniality has gained him so many friends during the five years he has held the position of assistant manager.

THE Chairman, Councillor Everton, in making the presentation, spoke in complimentary terms of Mr. Ferrier's abilities as a manager, especially during the absence of Mr. Harry Burns, and expressed every good wish for Mr. Ferrier's future career.

LIVERPOOL is to try the new experiment of giving musical comedy, comic opera, &c., twice nightly, and the Tivoli Theatre of Varieties in Lime-street will be reopened on Monday week by Mr. James Kiernan, the biggest debenture holder, with a condensed form of Florodora. It is stated that the name of the theatre is to be changed to that of the New Gaiety. The last time the word "Gaiety" was used in the city on the Mersey was in regard to a variety house in Camden-street, London-road, a place of entertainment that was controlled by Mr. (now Sir) Charles Wyndham, in the early seventies.

A SPECIAL meeting of the Oldham Watch Committee was held on Wednesday to consider the application of the Palace Hippodrome Co., Ltd., for a dramatic licence for the new variety house in Union-street. Mr. Armstrong, solicitor, who made the application on behalf of the company, said that if the committee granted the dramatic licence he could assure them the excise licence would not be imposed upon.

THE Chief-Constable said he had received a letter from Mr. Dottridge, manager of the Empire Theatre Co., Oldham, complaining that the new company had adopted the name "Hippodrome," which was the name of his theatre in Union-street. He said it would lead to considerable confusion. Mr. Armstrong pointed out that the syndicate he represented were the originators of the name "Hippodrome." Mr. Dottridge had changed the name of his theatre from "Gaiety" to "Hippodrome" in the last eighteen months, when he knew that the new company were about to build. The committee decided to grant a full dramatic licence on the usual conditions. The theatre will be named the Palace.

AN unfortunate incident occurred in the Pavilion, Glasgow, on Tuesday during the first house. Miss Topsy Sinden collapsed in a hysterical swoon during her second song, and the curtain had to be lowered. She had been well received for her military song and dance, and was in the middle of the first verse of her "Baker's daughter" song when her nerves got the better of her. She was able to appear in the second house.

As proof of the popularity attained in Glasgow by Mr. Samuel Lloyd, manager of the Pavilion there, it may be mentioned that he was asked by several influential people to allow himself to be proposed as a candidate for the Glasgow Town Council. Though flattered by the offer, Mr. Lloyd's multifarious duties precluded him from accepting, and so Councillor E. H. Bostock is still the only professional representative on the Council of Scotland's commercial capital.

THE Cardiff Empire is now beautiful in its new decorations. The scheme of colour is biscuit tint and rose du Barri, relieved with delicate touches of blue and pink, and brightened by English gold. The alabaster proscenium frame has been repolished, new curtains and drapery have been hung, and the floors re-carpeted. Marble has been substituted for the stone steps at the entrance, a new fireproof curtain has been erected, and altogether about £2,000 has been spent.

MRS. ADNEY PAYNE, widow of Mr. George Adney Payne, succeeded on Thursday in her action in Mr. Justice Phillimore's Court against her husband's administrator to recover £109—the amount paid to the estate by an insurance company in respect of damages to a motor-car, which, she said, Mr. Payne had given to her. Notice of appeal was given.

AT the recent transfer sessions at Middlesbrough, Mr. J. W. R. Punch requested that the music and singing licence should be transferred from Rene Pepi, the present licence-holder, to Albert Ernest Nicholls. He expressed the opinion that Mr. Nicholls was a person to whom the Chief Constable had no objection as a man, but there were certain requirements of the Justices which had not been fulfilled on the last occasion, and he believed that the Chief Constable would confirm the statement that these requirements had now been carried out.

THE Chief Constable agreed, but explained that he had other matters to bring to the notice of the Bench. On the occasion of the visit of Inspector Hird to the Hippodrome, he was stopped by an employee, and told he would not be admitted. He, however, went on to the stage, and found one of the hydrants completely blocked up. Signor Pepi was requested to see that the matter received attention; but the officer was told that he was not required to teach Pepi his business; that the stage was let to Lafayette, and no one had any right there. Mr. Punch said his clients were quite ready to apologise, and after hearing further statements, the Bench granted the application on the usual conditions.

To the Camden Theatre, on the application of Mr. Sidney Marler, was granted a music and dancing licence on Friday (yesterday) by the Licensing Committee sitting at the Clerkenwell Sessions House. The licence was granted subject to the conditions that intoxicants were not to be sold. Mr. B. P. Lucas, represented by Mr. Horace Avory, K.C., opposed, and counsel for the applicant was Mr. George Elliott. The local clergy were also in opposition. Mr. Walter Gibbons will run the house on the two-houses-a-night plan.

MR. HERBERT HYMAN, the resident manager of the Empire, Johannesburg, will arrive in London to-day from the Cape on a three months' visit combining business and pleasure.

MR. MONTE BAYLY, who succeeded Mr. Frank Gerald as secretary of the Variety Artists' Federation, has tendered his resignation, which has been accepted. Mr. J. E. Barry is acting temporarily as general secretary.

MISS LENA VERDI has been specially engaged by Mr. Fred Fredericks for a principal part in the forthcoming pantomime at the Borough Theatre, Stratford.

WE regret to announce that there is no improvement in the condition of Mr. Frank Heath, hon. treasurer of the Music Hall Sick Fund. Mrs. Heath has received many sympathetic messages since the announcement of her husband's serious illness appeared in these columns.

HYMACK was unable to open at the Empire on Monday owing to illness, caused, to no small extent, by overwork upon his new introduction and change. He returns to America for a five months' season, opening in New York at Christmas, but hopes to obtain London's opinion of his new work before sailing.

MR. CHARLES HECTOR, the manager of the Queen's, Poplar, was so impressed with the success of Miss Jessie Preston in her "Salome" song, that he had special bills printed on Tuesday morning notifying the fact. It is, without doubt, one of the funniest "skits" to be seen in London, and a certain winner for "dames" in pantomime.

NEXT week the Empire Theatre Bioscope will present some remarkable pictures of Italian cavalry at practice, going across country at top speed. Hedges and stone walls are negotiated, streams are forded, deep precipitous inclines are descended at full gallop, and, in the final photograph, men and horses are seen charging down a huge perpendicular slope, and turning somersaults in dire confusion at the bottom.

As a result of the sale of Miss Madge Temple's Marathon hat at Brighton, Mrs. Thomas Barrasford has had the pleasure of sending the following cheques to the respective charities:—Sussex County Hospital, £5 5s.; Children's Hospital, £3 3s.; Women's Hospital, £2 2s.; Brighton and Hove Dispensary, £2 2s. The highest bidder proved to be Mr. J. H. Pearson, of Clarendon-mansions, Brighton, who offered £12 10s., which amount has been distributed as above. Mr. Tom Chapman officiated with the hammer.

MR. WALTER REYNOLDS has the following motion on the agenda for discussion at a future meeting of the London County Council:—"That it be referred to the General Purposes Committee and the Theatres and Music Halls Committee to consider and report as to the advisability of providing, by an amendment of standing orders or otherwise, for music or music and dancing licenses to be granted, as in the case of stage plays licenses, at any time during the year."

AT the 583rd meeting of the Executive Committee of the M.H.A.R.A., held at the offices on Wednesday, Mr. Fred Herbert occupied the chair. There were also present Messrs. Fred Millis (vice-president), Arthur Gallimore, Marriott Edgar, Horace White, Jeff Vendome, T. C. Callaghan, Charles Preston, and C. Douglas Stuart (secretary).

THE following gentlemen were declared elected on a ballot of the members of the committee to fill the three vacancies in their ranks:—Alf. Herald, H. Herald, and Harry Clifford. The nominations for the position of chairman of the committee were:—Messrs. Fred Herbert and Albert Voyce, and Harry Blake for the office of vice-chairman. As Mr. Voyce did not desire to stand, Mr. Herbert and Mr. Blake will fill the positions.

MR. VAUGHAN WILLIAMS (instructed by Smith, Rundell, and Dodds), on behalf of the Hackney and Shepherd's Bush Empire Palace (Limited), on Monday asked leave to make an ex-parte application to Mr. Justice Channell in an immediate matter. His application was against Mr. George Robey. Mr. Justice Channell stated that he and Mr. Justice Bucknill were going to hear in chambers an application against some other comedian, and it would be better that they be heard together. The application was accordingly adjourned to chambers.

AT the football match, Tivoli v. Karno's, which was played at Tooting on Sunday, Nov. 1, Mr. George Robey, who was assisting the Tivoli, played a great game, and scored the only goal for his side, which was defeated by two goals to one. On Monday the famous comedian presented a new coloured jersey to each of the team—a kindly action that is much appreciated.

THE results up to date of the Music Hall and Theatrical League matches place the Stoke Newington and Tivoli clubs at the head of the list with four points. The Broadway, New Cross, and the Holborn Empire are debited with two points, and four other clubs have no points in their favour. At the finish of the season the winners of the League Cup will play "the rest," and the proceeds of the match will be divided between the V.A.B.F. and the Actors' Benevolent Fund.

IT is refreshing to hear on the variety stage so cultured a singer as Miss Annie Schuberth, who has been presenting her song scena, The Deputy, to audiences at the Euston. Miss Schuberth represents the humble understudy who is suddenly called upon to take the place of the operatic star. Previous to "going on" she tries a few solos "off," and secures a very gratifying reception in "Scenes that are brightest," from Maritana, and in the popular American numbers, "Loveland" and "Love me, and the world is mine." Her voice is rich and clear, and of excellent compass; she sings with ease and expression, and the Eustonians have been delighted.

AT a recent meeting of the Actors' Union it was decided that a letter written to that Union by Mr. Kenneth Blackmore, the secretary, with reference to the Trades Union Congress at Nottingham be published. It appears from a statement in that letter that the Variety Artists' Federation contended that the advocacy of the double licence would not be to their best interests as in the event of a strike the music-hall managers would engage companies to play at the halls while the strike lasted, and would thus defeat the objects of the movement. The resolution advocating the double licence was in the name of the Actors' Union and the Artists' Protection League, and as the twofold permit obtains at the Willesden and Ealing Hippodromes, the Richmond Theatre, the Walthamstow Palace, and other suburban variety houses, its universal application cannot long be delayed.

THE L.C.C. Licensing Committee on Friday decided to recommend the renewal of the Coliseum licence, on condition that no intoxicants be sold.

HINTS in regard to the reopening of the Franco-British Exhibition buildings next year were given at the sitting of the L.C.C. Licensing Committee at Clerkenwell, when Mr. Imre Kiralfy was granted a renewal of the music and dancing and stage plays licence in face of vigorous opposition.

THE Dunedin Troupe of cyclists, owing to their great success in the provinces, have been telegraphed for by Mr. Oswald Stoll to open at the Coliseum on Monday.

DON JUAN CAICEDO, the wire king, will sail from the States on board the Lucania on Nov. 11, arriving at Liverpool on the 17th and beginning at Sunderland on Nov. 23, with Glasgow, Manchester, Liverpool, and London Hippodrome to follow.

BEFORE about 2,000 spectators on Sunday last at Bailey's lane, the Stoke Newington Palace team played the Stratford Empire, scoring three goals in the first half and two in the second, the final score being five to two in their favour. The first of the Empire goals was scored from a penalty. Next Sunday the victors meet the Holborn Empire at Tooting.

MISS MAUDIE MAY MURRAY, the beautiful electrical dancer, at Curzon Hall, Birmingham, on Saturday, concluded a three weeks' most successful engagement, and seldom has such a reception been given to any dancer as that which greeted Miss Murray on her final appearance. She was recalled again and again, and her clever, bewildering dances will long be remembered in Birmingham. She has been specially engaged for pantomime at the Theatre Royal, Bolton.

THE novel features of the Fun City in the Olympia annexe will be the free variety show and the free cinematograph, which are to take the place of the time-honoured circus. The programme will be changed weekly, and competitions of a novel character will be continually run. Messrs. Relph and Pedley will provide a magnificent set of porkers, and many other well-known showmen will be represented.

As has always been the rule of the Olympia show, several novelties will be introduced to London for the first time, notably the Human Roulette Wheel, which has been the biggest money-maker at Coney Island for the past two years. Another novelty, bearing the timely title of the Suffragettes' Circus, is the invention of Mr. C. B. Cochran, who will have entire control of the Fun City for the owners of the building, the New Olympia Co., Ltd.

THE magnificent main hall will be transformed into a fairyland skating rink, and under the management of Messrs. Crawford and Wilkins, who so successfully control similar undertakings in the provinces, is sure to feed the Fun City with large crowds of good-class patrons. It must not be supposed, however, that the Fun City in the annexe will depend upon the skating rink, as there is to be a separate entrance in the Blythe-road, where an admission of sixpence will be charged, and with the countless attractions presented, the turnstiles are bound to be kept busy. The show will be ambitiously advertised, and no trouble or expense is to be spared to make it a winner.

LORD ROBERTS has written a delightful letter to J. Francis Barron and H. Trotère accepting the dedication of the song respectively written and composed by the twain, and entitled "Three Jolly Lightbobs (Jim, Joe, Jack)." Both the author, whose "Trumpeter" and "My Old Shako" are so justly acclaimed as tours de force, and the celebrated composer are veteran soldiers, for a quarter of a century since Mr. Barron was in the Queen's Bays and Mr. Trotère in the Rifle Brigade.

MISS HELEN TRIX opened at the Oxford for a four weeks' stay on Monday last, and, as her countrymen would say, "made good right away." Looking as dainty as a fairy in white, she seemed quite at her ease as she removed her hat and gloves, singing the while quite a novel number inquiring "What's the use?"

MISS TRIX says she likes everything in London except the trains. Two weeks ago she had occasion to journey from Waterloo to Clapham Junction. She inquired of porter after porter as to the right train, and entered one indicated. "Somebody had told me that Clapham was only four miles or so, and I was quite surprised when we went along at quite a pace for an hour or more. When we stopped at last it was at Basingstoke, and I had had 7s. worth of ride for 5d." The adventure might have had awkward consequences, for the last train back had gone and the hotels were shut. As it was, Miss Trix made herself as comfortable as circumstances permitted in the ladies' room until the first train back to town.

A STRIKING instance of the Bioscope's great task of recording history in life-motion pictures will be seen at the Palace Theatre on Monday, when Urbanora will include for the first time the veritable scenes of The Destruction of Hyderabad, to take which Mr. Charles Urban received special and exclusive permission from His Highness the Nizam. It will be remembered how, little more than a month ago, the River Musi burst its banks and swept away this picturesque capital of Southern India. Fifty thousand persons perished in the torrent; the city bridges, the ancient temples, and the dwellings of the populace were wiped out of existence; trees were uprooted, embankments demolished, and desolation spread throughout the land.

Mr. W. H. Clemart writes:—"One of the reasons I have for not answering at length the long letter from Mr. Tysoe-Smith is that all my spare time is occupied in dealing with the giants. I have no time for others. His opinion is of no importance to anybody but himself. When Mr. Tysoe-Hyphen-Smith proves to me that to be a clerk to a gentleman occupying a small office in the Barton-arcade, Manchester, where the banjo and guitar were taught, is sufficient qualification for becoming a music-hall agent I will talk to him. My only hope is that he has increased his knowledge of our business since he addressed a letter to me at the London Pavilion, to Mile End-road, Whitechapel, E."

MR. G. H. ELLIOTT, who has been starring on a Stoll tour, has this week returned to illuminate the metropolis with his bright and buoyant coon creations, and is appearing at the Tivoli and the Balham Hippodrome. The latter house, where Mr. E. W. Hancorne James has returned to his former post of manager, was crowded to excess on the occasion of a recent visit, and the welcome accorded to the "chocolate coloured coon" was quite affectionate in its warmth. Attired in a suit of the hue associated with his title, Mr. Elliott sang of "Sue" with all his old vigour and tunefulness, the haunting refrain being taken up with zest in the auditorium. The dusky dude was speedily changed into a veritable denizen of the cotton-fields, who gave "I want to go to Idaho," and supplemented the song with a smart dance marked by incredible lightness of foot and many varieties of stepping. An eloquent testimony of Mr. Elliott's popularity is found in the announcement that he has no vacancies till 1917.

THE ordinary monthly meeting of the committee of the Music Hall Sick Fund will be held at the Crown Hotel, Charing Cross-road, on Wednesday next, at 4 p.m. Members of the committee who are in town are invited to attend.

GEORGE BURTON'S Professional Diary and Datebook is a compact, neatly-bound volume that goes easily into a breast pocket. It is published at 5, Milner's Chambers, Fargate, Sheffield, and can be had post free for 1s. 1½d. The receipts and expenses pages for every week in 1909 will be found extremely convenient and complete in detail, and there is a mass of information concerning posters and letterpress, commission rates, percentages, &c., that should be extremely valuable to the profession.

MR. ARTHUR ROBERTS was the defendant in an action in the Marylebone County Court on Thursday, in which the plaintiffs were Messrs. Kingham and Hobbs, motor and general engineers, of Edgware-road. It was an action remitted from the High Court to recover £21 18s. 6d., the balance of a sum of £57 2s. 1d. originally sued for in respect of an account against the defendant for repairs to motor-cars and garage rent. The defendant, who is now on tour in Scotland, did not appear. Judgment was entered for plaintiffs, both on the claim and counter-claim, with costs.

A VERY large crowd witnessed a rather smart motor wedding on Tuesday at St. John's Church, Leeds, between Arthur Percival, only son of the late Colonel Thwaites, J.P., of Harrogate and Bradford, and Elsie, only child of Walter Curtis, the humorous entertainer, of Vernon-street, Leeds.

AMONGST the donors of numerous presents were Mr. and Mrs. Harry Randall, silk cushion; Miss Nell Emerald, Parisian sequin coatee; Mr. T. Gerald Morton (Empire, Leeds), set of furs; Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Whiteman (Leeds), candelabra; Miss Annie Schuberth, eider-down quilt; Mr. Fred Kitchen, case of wine; Mr. Charles Porter (Norwich), bookcase; Mr. and Mrs. William Child (Old Bill) (Leeds), case of fish knives; Mr. and Mrs. William Bolland (Cleethorpes), large silver shoe-horn; Miss Jennie Johns, large photo frames; Mr. Tom Sherwood (Opera House, Wakefield), silver pin tray; and Mr. Arthur E. Melbourne (Hardie-Von Leer Co.), silver and glass jam dish. Mr. Fred W. Wood, Queen's Theatre and City Varieties, Leeds, kindly provided the motor-cars.

LA MILO, who has for the last three years been constantly at duty with her act, with which she recently completed her fourth successful tour of the Moss-Stoll circuit, and subsequently a tour of the large provincial centres under her own management, has just returned from a well-earned holiday on the Continent. Going over to Berlin, she put up at the Hotel Adlon, the well-known rendezvous of all that is famous in the world of art and letters. She soon became the chief attraction, resulting in her introduction into the most exclusive circles of Continental society, being invited to that Imperial function known as the Kaiser Breakfast, over which the Kaiser presides, and which is reserved for the élite of the world's talent.

ONE of the chief attractions of the Imperial city is the Kaiser's War Museum, which appealed strongly to La Milo as the daughter of a highly-placed British officer. But the greatest feast for the poseuse was the sculpture section of the Galleries of Art, in which she showed almost emotional interest. Before leaving Berlin, La Milo received many Continental offers at very high salaries, but she had to decline them owing to her work at Liverpool, where she is adding many new features to her act, and being already heavily booked, she has also had to decline, for the present anyhow, considerable value in American bookings.

LEAVING Berlin amidst regrets caused by her short stay, La Milo made her way to Paris, where amongst the leaders of art and letters she was soon in receipt of the eulogies which Paris knows how to express to its affinities as the accepted of the nobility and chief citizens of France. Proceeding to the shrine of her old love, La Milo stood in emotional admiration before the chipped and mutilated Venus di Milo, the beloved of the art world and the pride of France; the mortal became weak in the presence of the sublimity of its idol, and, visibly affected to tears, was gently led from the noble creation with whose inspiration she has electrified the whole world.

RETURNING to England, full of the enthusiasm gained from her short holiday on the Continent, La Milo went direct to Liverpool, where, in her large studio and works, assisted by her staff of expert mechanics, she evolves the ideal in breathing marble whose classical truth to detail has made her name a household word in the homes of England, where she has decided to permanently settle, not as a flash-in-the-pan feature, but as a solid institution of Art on the foundation of popular appreciation so generously shown by the public to the ideal and magnificence of classical art.

MESSRS. JOHN FULLER AND SONS have for the present abandoned vaudeville, and are now open to tour first-class attractions through New Zealand either on share or certainty. They also undertake to manage any companies on a tour through Australia, and are at time of writing running a company of the Messrs. Macmahon. Miss Florence Baines opens at Christchurch in November, and after touring the Dominion plays Christmas at Auckland. Negotiations are proceeding with a prominent dramatic manager in Australia. In New Zealand good companies can be sure of doing good business from Jan. 1 to Dec. 31. Audiences, too, are catholic in their tastes; and anything from Grand Opera to a picture show does business according to merit.

A SPECIAL matinée, promoted by Signor Pepi, in aid of the Veterans' Relief Fund, was held in the Darlington Hippodrome on Thursday afternoon. It was under the patronage of the Mayor (Mr. C. W. Starmer) and Corporation, and in addition to the usual full programme there were turns by local ladies and gentlemen, and artists from the Middlesbrough Hippodrome. The Florodora Girls introduced an acceptable novelty with their fishing song, and landed a good catch of silver and copper, amounting to £2 5s. 8d. The other artists giving their services were King and Benson, J. W. Rowley, J. Bowman, Mrs. Hartley, J. A. Wilson and his performing dog, Jimmy Shields, C. J. O'Dowd, Sterling and Love, F. Seamore, the Athlones, F. Horsfall, C. Russell, Janette Hall, W. Richmond, and Will Finlay.

THE Theatres and Music Halls Committee of the L.C.C. recommended on Tuesday that the provisional licence for music and dancing granted on Nov. 22, 1907, to Imre Kiralfy for the Franco-British Exhibition be confirmed; that notice of such confirmation be endorsed on the licence; and that the seal of the Council be affixed to such endorsement. The Rev. Stewart Headlam asked the chairman of the committee whether he would take immediate steps to get proper lavatory accommodation for women and the girls employed at the exhibition. Mr. Greenwood replied that the licence would be before the Council on the 27th, when the Council could decide any details as to the conditions. The reception of the recommendation was opposed, and had therefore to stand over,

SONGS, WRITERS, AND SINGERS.

MR. DAVID DAY on Saturday last (Hallowe'en) received the following expressive cable from New York: "We're havin' a gran' nicht.—Harry Lauder, Annie Lauder, Alice Lloyd, Tom McNaughton, Fred McNaughton, John Abbott, Jerome Kern, May Dreyfus, Victoria Dreyfus, Louis Dreyfus, and Fred Day."

MISS HELEN TRIX is making a great hit in town with two of Messrs. Francis and Day's numbers, "So what's the use?" by Fred Day, and "I don't want nuthin' but you," by James Brachman.

THAT delightful artist Miss Topsy Sinden has a new song entitled "Hi! Yi! Yoodle-Oodle-Oo," which Messrs. Francis and Day are placing on the market. It is by Douglas Townshend, and the striking air has been composed by Herbert E. Haines, of Catch of the Season fame.

"GOOD-BYE, POLLY; OR, I MIGHT COME BACK SALOON" and "The old love is the gold love," Miss Lottie Lennox's two newest successes, have been published by Messrs. Francis and Day. They are by Paul Pelham and Herbert Rule.

ONE of the reasons given in the Bankruptcy Court for the failure of Mr. Bailey, of the West London Theatre, Marylebone, was the removal of costermongers' stalls from Edgware-road to Church-street.

MISS NINA WOOD at the Coliseum has made a great success by her artistic rendering of Kennedy Russell's song, "Dear little jammy face," which Messrs. Lublin publish. Miss Wood possesses a cultivated voice, a fine touch whilst accompanying herself, and an agreeable presence.

AMONG new songs shortly to be issued by Messrs. Francis and Day are "An 'orrible state of affairs," by Reg. Low, and "Tommy's ready—all's well!" by Alf Ellerton, the music by Alf Ellerton, jun.

AFTER an interview with Mr. Lester Barrett, the great song expert and manager of the professional department of the famous song providers Messrs. Francis, Day and Hunter, London, we learn that "Oh! Oh! Antonio!" the song which caused such a furore at the seaside, where it was sung by Miss Florrie Ford, is bound to make a furore this Christmas. This story deals with an Italian ice-cream merchant who has deserted his little Italian maid. Both words and music are exceedingly catchy. The refrain runs as follows:—

"Oh! Oh! Antonio. He's gone away;
Left me alone-i-o, all on my own-i-o.
I want to meet him with his new sweetheart,
Then up will go Antonio and his ice-cream cart."

MR. G. H. ELLIOTT, who is playing at the Prince of Wales's Theatre pantomime, will be responsible for all Birmingham whistling, humming, and singing his latest song, "Sue, Sue, Sue," which has already taken all London and the provinces by storm. This song promises to outrival his well-known "If the man in the moon were a coon."

THE pantomime production for special lighting effects will be Miss Madge Temple's great London Coliseum success, "Come be my Rainbow," which was introduced with the greatest possible success at the above theatre by Miss Temple. So catchy is it that one will quite unconsciously find oneself humming or whistling it.

MR. GEORGE LASHWOOD'S "Hang out the front door key" and Miss Hetty King's "I'm afraid to come home in the dark" are sure first favourites for Christmas. "K-I- double T-Y" is a very striking novelty number, in which the singer will be assisted by five girls with the five letters in floral decorations—one worn by each girl. The letters will be finally lit up with small electric lamps hidden in the floral design—forming the word "Kitty."

EVERY pantomime must have a "march" number, and honours of the many published during the year fall to the great chorus song "Bombadier." In this number everybody will be on the stage. In the first verse the lights will be on full, in the second, which tells of the girl picturing her lover on the battlefield, red lighting effect will be most prominent, and for the last verse, telling of their wedding, some fine drilling will be seen, swords and sabres crossed, and a very small "bombadier" and his bride in bridal costume will be seen marching under the crossed swords amid a shower of confetti.

THIS year the song about girls is taking new phase. For years past every song has been in praise of the fair sex; so is this one, which is entitled "Every fellow's in love with a girl, and quite right, too," but the novel treatment it has received takes it entirely away from the ordinary song "about girls." This clever lyric, wedded to a catchy melody, is bound to stand out above all others of the same kind.

THE ballad is essential in pantomime. This year it will be "Sweetheart days," which has already been extensively popularised by Mr. Arthur Aldridge and Mr. Harry Claff. "Shadowland" is the title of another charming ditty, in which some fine visionary effects will be introduced.

ANOTHER charming number, with an irresistible refrain, is "On the cliffs of Normandy." "Mandy's Wedding" is a characteristic number for solo and chorus, and has been a very big feature in all the seaside programmes.

"MY GIRL'S A YORKSHIRE GIRL" will surely appeal to all the northern pantomime audiences. The costumes for this will give strong local colour. The chorus is ear-haunting, and we feel sure that when the singer comes to the phrase "Eh! by gum! she's a champion" he or she will have plenty of assistance from the audience, who will be unable to refrain from joining in.

THE comedians, of course, are well provided for in the way of comic songs which have already been extensively popularised in the music halls by our leading star comedians. "'Do you remember?'—'How can I forget?'" is sure to form one of the principal duets between the dame and the comedian, the words being extremely funny.

OTHER prominent numbers will be R. G. Knowles's "L.S.D.," Mr. Harry Simm's "Who said he don't like girls?" Miss Hetty King's "Are you the little girl?" Miss Annie Braddan's "Far away in Australia," Miss Millie Legarde's "Who's the lucky boy?" and Miss Madge Temple's popular "Esau" song.

THE National Music Publishing Company, of 132, Charing Cross-road, W.C., are having no end of applications for Lowenwirth and Cohan's great chorus song, "My little Eva," which has already been settled for almost every pantomime in Great Britain. Among the other numbers they are making free for pantomime are George Lashwood's two latest successes, "If it's a lady" and "Nicolo, Nicolo, play on your piccolo"; also Miss Victoria Monks' two big winners, "I wish I had a pal like you" and "Call round any old time." With the latter number Miss Claire Romaine is making a tremendous success in America."

MR. J. P. LONG is the author of all Ernie Mayne's new numbers, with which he returns to town on Monday next at the London Coliseum.

A LADY GLOBE TROTTER.

We have had celebrated lady globe-trotters—English, American, and colonial—before Miss Henriquette Maude set her foot on the shores of the Motherland and accomplished one of the much-desired goals of her self-imposed journey through the hemispheres. Others of her sex have in a limited sense earned the title of globe-trotter, by which we designate her, but their wanderings have been accompanied by opulence. They have had every facility for pursuing their journey, and any difficulty they may have met has been smoothed over by the higher diplomacy or backsheesh. Miss Maude had none of these advantages. Almost without purse or scrip—she had only a few pounds when she started—she left her home at Napier five years ago; but she had a large reserve of grit, pluck, and determination. With her favourite golf stick in her hand she embarked at Wellington for the new republic, Australia, and thus commenced her world's journey of 55,000 miles. A love of adventure seems to have been implanted in the nature of this engaging little traveller, and the fact that she was kidnapped soon after she was born, and not recovered for months afterwards, may have had no little influence on her youthful imagination. Her father, a famous New Zealand judge, traced her to a Maori encampment; and in this connection we may let Miss Maude tell us of a curious coincidence. "When I was appearing last week at the Queen's,

MISS HENRIQUETTE MAUDE,
The Little New Zealand Travelling Girl.

Poplar, curiously enough, an old Maori chief came to the hall to see me. His 'prah' is only about seven miles from my home. I know the tribe very well. He is in private employment at the moment, but I am contemplating bringing him into my act to dance a 'haake,' an old Maori war dance. It has never been seen on the English stage, and ought to prove a draw—the more especially as this native's ancestors were the most notorious cannibal tribe of old New Zealand."

During her travels Miss Maude has, wherever it has been possible, worked for charity, and a remarkable instance of her kindness of heart is her personal advocacy of the cause of a jockey at Melbourne. Seriously injured by a fall with his mount, he was left unattended by those in control of the meeting. By giving a series of recitals at a local hall she raised a large amount. When she arrived at Sydney, N.S.W., she had but two pounds, and at Melbourne she possessed but a few shillings. Since then she has travelled Afghanistan, China, Africa, America, on trackless prairie, lonely veldt, or arid desert, entirely alone, carrying a revolver—which she has never had to use—and her golf cleek—her mascot. A fragile figure and a soft voice scarcely reveal the will-power of this self-possessed little woman, about whom there is no suspicion of mannishness. She tells us that her travels have been prompted by sheer curiosity to learn something that the man in the street knows nothing about, and to satiate a love of adventure. After traversing the South Sea Islands—prior to which she had received a present from the Hon. Richard Seddon, the Premier of New Zealand—she made her way to Thursday Island, Samoa, Honolulu, and Tahiti, and at last got to Vancouver, where she joined a company of opera singers. Going across to Canada, she entered the States, and gave private entertainments in order to make a living for herself and to give occasional help to some deserving object.

In Chicago she was stranded, but with her knowledge of languages and her ability to play the piano she managed to obtain employment as foreign correspondent at a big organ builder's. Here she received sixteen dollars a week. The work, however, proved too irksome, and had to be given up, after a two months' engagement. She then rented a small hall, gave a magic lantern entertainment, played the piano, sang, and recited, netting a goodly sum, two-thirds of which were devoted to hospital funds. At San Francisco in a dramatic competition, entered by 500 people, she won a gold medal, which was presented to her by President Roosevelt. On her journey to Los Angeles she performed perhaps the most extraordinary undertaking ever accomplished by a woman alone. With her knapsack and two pairs of spare boots strapped on her back, she traversed the Texan desert. In the course of her tramp she was four times held up by footpads; and eventually, from sheer weakness and exhaustion, due to want of nourishment and clean water, she had to stop. A party of Texas cowboys discovered her and took her to their ranch, where she was ill for nearly six weeks, being attended by an old Indian squaw, and treated medically by native methods. The admiration of the cowboys for her pluck and endurance resulted in their sending her measurements to San Francisco and ordering the very suit of regulation mocassins and jumper in which she now appears on the stage. Of Miss Maude's performance we need say very little, because we have already explained that, in addition to the lantern slides taken by her in the course of her travels, her description of thrilling experiences is quite unique. She is a most interesting conversationalist, because she relates her stories of the wilds of Texas and of the isles of the Southern Seas simply and naturally, and without any striving after effect.

"THE LITTLE PEACEMAKER."

The Father .....MR. RONALD BAYNE
His Daughter .....MISS EVELYN HOPE
Her Child ..... LITTLE DORA

This slight episode, which was produced on Monday last, is only what may be termed an incident, but it is extremely well written and capitally played. It is Christmas Eve, and the old father is alone. It seems that some years before his only daughter had got into trouble, and, having abandoned her child, has been leading a dissolute life. The father has rescued his grandchild, whom he has since tended with the utmost care. His daughter returns home, and after a pathetic scene with her stern parent is about to go away again. At this moment the child enters, and is recognised by her mother, who demands that she shall go with her. The grandfather asks the child to decide. The child pleads for them all to stay together, and so the erring daughter is forgiven. Miss Evelyn Hope, as the daughter, plays in a most sympathetic manner; Mr. Ronald Bayne submits a fine portrayal of the father; and Little Dora is very natural as the child. The play, which is well staged, has been cordially received.

MR. TED E. BOX is making his way surely in public favour, and his continued gratifying successes in his comedy whistling should speedily bring him to the forefront of star turns.

CARL AND CARR'S new act is scoring a huge success, being booked for Moss and Stoll tour, including London Coliseum. They have also had numerous offers for pantomime, but have settled at Theatre Royal, Worcester, to play special parts in Puss in Boots.

DR. WALFORD BODIE made his reappearance at the Hippodrome Theatre, Coventry, on Monday, and was greeted with loud cheers. Several of his patients that were cured a year ago by him were shown on the stage. A good turn is given by a clever horse Billy. Other artists who appear during the evening are Gladys and Alber, in a potpourri act; Mr. and Mrs. Harold Finden, the popular sketch artists; Stephens and Rennior, ragtime dancers; Bella Skene, burlesque actress; Dolly Robson, a pleasing songstress; Iben Obed, Arabian equilibrist; and Lew Loman, vocal comedian.

BEFORE Mr. Registrar Linklater, in the Court of Bankruptcy, an application for discharge was made on Tuesday by Alfred Wood, who filed his own petition on July 21 last, describing himself as of Brixton-road, S.W., song-writer. The debtor stated that he had only one liability of £102 0s. 5d., which was secured to the extent of £90, and there were no assets. His real name was Alfred James Scott Dodd, but he assumed the name of Alfred Wood when he entered the theatrical profession in 1893. In 1898, with a capital of £500, he began to tour in the provinces with his own company, and in 1903 he ran a musical comedy called The Terrible Tomboy, which proved a costly failure, and over which he lost about £400 in two months. His Honour suspended the order of discharge for two years.

GOLF CLUB FOR ACTORS AND VARIETY ARTISTS.

MR. WILL EVANS'S SCHEME.

What would the actor of Kean's time, or even of the late Sir Henry Irving's struggling days, have thought had it been suggested to him that he should spare some of his leisure for athletic pursuits? Would he not have indignantly ridiculed the proposal as an absurd new-fangled idea? He might even have considered it beneath the dignity of one of his profession to run for a ball on a cricket field! As for kicking a leathern case filled with air—gadzooks! such a piece of physical flippancy was irreverence when one thought of the sock and buskin! And yet to-day, what happens? Most of our leading actors play an important part in the sports and pastimes of the age. Practically every theatrical touring company has its little coterie of enthusiastic cricketers or golfers who compete with the local teams in the towns that are visited. And not infrequently the result of the contest is not flattering to the "home team." So among London actors there is a recognised body of athletes who are to be seen during the summer months winning laurels other than of the Thespian order at Lord's or the Oval. Altogether, it is a gratifying feature of the modern play-actor's life, and its accomplishment is one, surely, that should impart to him greater zest in the performance of his more serious work of entertaining the public. And that is not all.

MR. WILL EVANS.

Manly exercises of the kind indicated breed in those who engage in them an esprit, a spirit of tolerance and a discipline that are not merely admirable in themselves, but tend to a better feeling among, and a kinder understanding of the members of a company in particular, and the members of the profession in general.

For these reasons, and for others which will be quite apparent to the reader, a scheme which has just been initiated by Mr. Will Evans, the well-known comedian, should find great favour in the sister professions—the "legitimately" theatrical and the music-hall. Some time ago Mr. Evans, during one of his health-seeking peregrinations, found his way to Mitcham. There he saw a house surrounded by ample and beautiful grounds. These he purchased, and there he made his abode. At the back of his garden he espied a tract of field some 50 acres in extent, and having an access from the main road. Those 50 acres he snapped up, for here he foresaw the possibilities of the formation of an excellent golf and sports club. His plan now is to form such a club, the members of which would be drawn from the best class of theatrical and variety artists and other select folk who would be chosen. The membership roll would not be allowed to exceed 200, and the committee would probably be quite content with 150. There would be sufficient space of ground for a nine-hole golf course, a bowling-green, and lawn tennis and croquet courts. Of course, ladies would be welcomed as members. The subscription would be on such a scale as would preclude the likelihood of any undesirable people joining the club, and this, in conjunction with the process of selection of members, would be an adequate guarantee as to the respectability and suitability of the men and women with whom one would come in contact on the grounds. The successful materialisation of Mr. Evans's scheme would involve the erection of a pavilion in which tea and refreshments of all kinds would be available. The club would be open on Sundays, and this might solve the question of healthful weekends. Mr. Evans has already the support of twelve gentlemen, among whom is Mr. Herbert Blackmore; but a committee has yet to be formed. Mr. Evans will be pleased to hear from any lady or gentleman who would like to become members, and he will furnish any information on the subject that may be desired, if inquiries are addressed to him at Graylands, Sutton-road, Mitcham. The grounds for the proposed club are situated on the Ravensbury Park Estate at Mitcham, and an entrance to them is gained from the Sutton-road.

A PROTEAN COMEDIAN.

It was formerly a reproach against protean actors from Italy that each was so much like the other—the one but a reflex of his predecessor; but Mr. Alfred Butt's latest newcomer, Constantino Bernardi, who takes chief place in the Palace programme, is more cosmopolitan in his art, and presents an entertainment that is remarkable by reason of its versatility and its originality. Constantino Bernardi opens with an amusing exposition of an opera rehearsal, impersonating basso, tenor, and soprano. No sooner has he finished the cadenza of an Italian basso that he gets behind a screen. Then a clever arrangement—a not by any means palpable substitution of a dummy for the performer—enables the latter to take up the rôle of the tenor, who, in his turn, is replaced at the piano by another dummy, thus enabling the soprano to assert herself always, bien entendu, through the medium of Bernardi, who, by a slight use of ventriloquism, keeps the trio going.

At his retirement the dummy device is exposed. The more important part of his act comes with the complete exposure of his methods of quick-change through transparent scenery—a departure in protean acts that has been exploited recently at the London Pavilion. The scene is a music-hall, and the personalities presented include the manager, the stage-manager, a porter, a policeman, an elderly lady and her daughter, and an Italian signorina. In the music-hall performance which follows, Bernardi appears first as a clown musician playing the sleigh bells, on which he shows considerable proficiency. In the lighter vein he impersonates a hypnotiser with a "subject" who is supposed to be in a cataleptic state. Here we have a droll travesty of such performances, and, incidentally, the levitation feat is accomplished. Bernardi's attempted explanation of the modus operandi of this popular trick is completely drowned by the band. The tricks of the American eccentric—a "tramp" champion shot, wearing innumerable medals—are parodied with much drollery, the various mechanical "notions" of the tatterdemalion comedian from "across the pond" being introduced. The washing the baby business is scarcely so entertaining as the trick-shooting burlesque. Miss Foller, a "queen of light," another creation of Bernardi's, dances in a very elaborate and beautiful scene, and we see "the butterfly," "the bed of the ocean," "the fire," an "illuminated fountain," and "the snow" produced by means of chromatropic effects. Bernardi winds up his entertainment by appearing as Chung Ling Foo, the illusionist. The show is received with considerable favour, and is a decided attraction.

Another newcomer in the Palace bill is Señorita Maria Vinent, an artist from the Opera House, Madrid. Mlle. Vinent, who is a charming brunette, has benefited greatly by the vocal culture of Mme. Marchesi, and sings with a volume of tone and expression, also dancing the farandole in graceful fashion. Marie Dainton's mimicry needs no praise. Marguerite Cooper, at the piano, sings "Janie" and "Hello! Martha" with her usual success, and, in response to an encore, gives the familiar "Dingle Dongle Dell." Others contributing to the programme are Sydney Lee, Bert Levy, Nancy Thornton, the Palace Girls, Moran and Wiser, and Josie Delaine. Mr. Hermann Finck's orchestra is heard to advantage in "L'Entente Musicale," the instrumental interlude.

A DIMINUTIVE comedian of great cleverness has been discovered for the Continent, and is now at the Alhambra, Paris.

MISS RAY MASKELL, the clever comedienne and dancer, has just finished with big success as top of the bill at the Apollo, Berlin.

THE many friends of Mr. Frank Weston, resident-manager of the Empire Palace, Wolverhampton, will be pleased to hear that he is now convalescent after a severe attack of influenza.

AT the Queen's Palace of Varieties, Poplar, Messrs. Abrahams have started a series of Sunday entertainments, the profits of which are handed over to the Poplar Hospital.

ON Thursday Oct. 29, in aid of the Universal Bread and Coal Society, a performance was given at the Paragon. During Mr. Phil Ray's entertainment he kindly gave a guinea towards the funds.

THAT rising young actor Mr. Phil Le Sueur has been specially engaged by Mr. Edward Marris for his sketch The Dandy Millionaire, which is being produced at the Surrey Theatre next Monday. Mr. Le Sueur is a Jersey man, and his fellow islanders seem likely to have cause to be proud of him.

MR. ALFRED H. BOTWRIGHT has appointed Mr. Edgar Curtis, the well-known comedian, his assistant-manager for the forthcoming series of concerts promoted by him at the Public Hall Baths, Wimbledon, which commence on the 14th inst., and which will comprise a strong variety show and the Walturdaw Bioscope.

THE sapient remarks which appeared in the Daily Telegraph on Saturday have caused the greatest amusement to prominent song-writers who have read them. Such fees as those mentioned are rare; and retaining fees only come to about three or four bards.

MR. SYD GODFREY has settled panto with one of John A. Thomson's companies, playing Mrs. Sinbad. Miss Irene May, a niece of Mr. Godfrey's, plays Zorilda in the same production. Miss May's versatility as a performer extends to juggling, and she recently won a prize in a beauty competition in Birmingham.

SENORITA MARIA VINENT, the Spanish singer and dancer at the Palace Theatre, was born in the palace of the Marquis of Palomares de Duero. Her grandfather was Antonio Vinent, Marquis of Palomares de Duero. He was immensely rich, and left a beautiful palace in Seville in Mauresque style, with sculptures looking like lace from top to base. The war with Cuba ruined the Vinent family, and Maria had to work. She diligently studied Italian, singing, and music with the well-known Mme. Marchesi, and began at the Lyric Theatre of Milan at the age of seventeen in the following operas:—Philémon et Baucis (Gounod), Pagliacci (Leoncavallo), and Manon (Massenet). Manon is one of her best interpretations. Her répertoire has been largely increased since those early days, and she has fulfilled engagements in Russia, Constantinople, Madrid (1903-4), and Oporto.

SONGS, WRITERS, AND SINGERS.

A new song of Sam Mayo's, entitled "The wind blew hard from the north-south-west," has just been published by the Von Tilzer company in their one-shilling edition. These publishers have also secured Mr. Mayo's "Listen to me and I'll prove that I'm right," which they will issue shortly, together with a big chorus song, "A message from England," by Worton David and R. Penso.

There is an unprecedented demand for the Von Tilzer Music Co.'s topical pantomime number "What a terrible thing that would be." Applications come in by almost every post from all parts of England, Ireland, and Scotland. The pantomime rights have been disposed of for Birmingham, Liverpool, Newcastle, Dublin, and Belfast, and Mr. Dan Rolyat has secured the West-end (London) pantomime rights for the Adelphi.

Mr. George Lashwood's hit, "Saturday Afternoon," will also be a pantomime winner this year, having been disposed of for Mr. Robert Arthur's, Mr. John Hart's, Mr. J. F. Elliston's, and numerous other big pantomimes.

Mr. George Burton, the well-known pantomime librettist and musical director, has written a certain hit in "Men who were born, not made." The well-turned verses deal with celebrities of all degrees and periods, and the music is tuneful and catchy. Mr. James Kiddie has secured the rights for his three pantomimes.

Mr. Arthur Sutcliffe continues to increase his popularity at the London Pavilion nightly. This hall is hardly what one would call "a chorus singing house," nevertheless, the audiences find it impossible to refrain from singing the chorus of Mr. Sutcliffe's song "Have you got another like Mary?" This number will be heard in nine out of every ten pantomimes on Boxing Night. The Star Music Co. are the publishers.

That ubiquitous ditty "Carolina Brown of Chinatown" seems to be the favourite pantomime number amongst principal girls and those who want a semi-coon song, and in this line there appears to be a great lack of good numbers this season. Miss Daisy Dormer, Miss Ella Retford, Miss Minnie Mace, and others continue to go great guns with this catchy number, which was such a feature at the seaside during the past summer. The Star Music Co. are now making this a free song for the halls.

Mr. Ambrose Thorne has been featuring no less than six of the Star Co.'s numbers in South Africa. Of these, his greatest hits were "I don't care if there's a girl there" and "Meet me under the clock." Mr. Thorne has been singing the above two numbers during this week at the Empire, York, to hurricanes of applause

Considerable credit is due to Mr. John Lloyd with the Harmony Four for his effective rendition of "I'm wearing my heart away for you." This song is certain to be extensively used by principal boys and others during the forthcoming pantomime season, as it fits any situation. It is published by Charles Sheard and Co.

Another principal boy song that Messrs. Sheard are recommending is H. Trotère's delightful new song "I love you more," as it is sure to please both vocalist and audience.

A sequel to "I'm wearing my heart away for you," written by Messrs. Clifton Bingham and Marcus Hope, will shortly be published by Messrs. Sheard, who confidently anticipate a greater success with it than with the original song even.

Mr. T. W. Thurban was so impressed with the tricky effects he introduced into the orchestral score of his latest composition, "The war-whoop rag," two step and march, that he couldn't resist committing his delightful feelings to paper in a letter to Messrs. Sheard, saying: "This will be a great big hit for you! Bigger than my 'Mumblin' Mose.'"

Pantomime musical directors should write Messrs. Sheard for band parts of "The war-whoop rag" and of their two newest waltzes—"Charme," by Th. Pinet, and "My dreamy," by Constance V. White. They are both delightful waltzes.

Mr. Harrison Brockbank, who recently made an enormous hit with Rudyard Kipling's "Follow me 'ome" at Devonshire Park, Eastbourne, where he had the able assistance of the Duke of Devonshire's orchestra, created a perfect furore and absolutely thrilled his audience with the same song at the first concert of the season given by the Association of Lancastrians on Monday evening last at the Hotel Cecil.

So great was Mr. Harrison Brockbank's success that he will sing "Follow me 'ome," by special desire, on Sunday evening, the 15th inst., at His Majesty's Theatre, with the London Symphony Orchestra, at the concert given by the Playgoers' Club in aid of the Poor Children's Pantomime Fund. Mr. Brockbank will also continue to sing the song at all his numerous engagements. It is published by Messrs. Chas. Sheard and Co.

Mr. W. Ward-Higgs is to be congratulated on his admirable setting of Mr. Kipling's new barrack-room ballad, "Follow me 'ome," the spirit of which he has caught to a nicety. The orchestral effects of the closing lines of the vocalised symphony—

"For it's 'Three rounds blank' an' follow me,
'An' it's 'Thirteen rank' an' follow me;
Oh, passin' the love o' women,
Follow me—follow me 'ome," with muffled drums and rattle of the rifle volleys, is simply electrifying and truly dramatic. What a song for capable baritones! who should make a point of hearing Mr. Brockbank's magnificent rendering.

"Tommy's Ready—All's Well!" is the title of a fine stirring patriotic song, written by A. Ellerton, and melodised by A. Ellerton, jun. It has been accepted for immediate publication by Mr. David Day. The present European unrest quite justifies the theme of this promising number, which should be a great pantomime hit.

"A Tiny Seed of Love" is becoming such a rapid favourite for pantomime, that no fewer than three artists in four different productions say they will either sing it or not appear. No doubt they will reconsider their present attitude. However, Messrs. Feldman have now decided to place this song definitely with the first artist that comes along for it, and thus save managers and producers endless trouble.

Messrs. B. Feldman and Co. claim to have achieved a record, having settled this week George Lashwood's great success, "A White Man," with thirty of Great Britain's principal boys for production in pantomime. This exceeds their experience with their former world-wide successes, "By the side of the Zuyder Zee" and "Put me amongst the girls."

Mr. Charles Whittle returned to town, and opened at the Oxford on Monday, and created an instantaneous success with Messrs. Feldman's new song, "I want you to see my girl," which will doubtless became as popular as his former triumph, "Put me amongst the girls."

"FREE TRADE" IN THEATRE AND MUSIC-HALL LICENCES.

CHAT WITH MR. WALTER REYNOLDS, L.C.C.

"That, in the opinion of the Council, it is unnecessary to differentiate between the licences granted to theatres and to music halls; and that it be referred to the General Purposes Committee to consider and report what amendments should be made in the standing orders of the Council with the view to granting a general and uniform licence to all places of entertainment licensed by the Council, under which it would be optional for the licensee, subject to such restrictions as may be considered desirable, to give either dramatic or what are known as variety entertainments."

So runs a notice of motion in the name of Mr. Jocelyn Brandon on the agenda paper of the London County Council, and regarding it our interviewer sought the opinion of Mr. Walter Reynolds, L.C.C., the other day.

"There is no doubt," said Mr. Reynolds, "that Mr. Brandon's desire, as expressed in this notice of motion, is a perfectly logical one, and I think that the opinion of the Council generally would be in favour of 'free trade' in theatrical licences. I see no reason why we should not grant the same licence to all applicants, whether they be owners or managers of theatres or of music halls. We now give those licences solely on the ground that the buildings satisfy our requirements as theatres or music halls. Whether or not they are wanted is a question that is not within our purview. When a man wants to open his building, we ask him, 'Which licence will you have?' and he chooses one or the other. The logic of it is—Why should he not have both, since we are ready to grant him either? To put the matter shortly, let a man put up a building which satisfies us, and it is a matter of indifference to us whether he produces four-act plays or presents a music hall programme. But difficulties arise in other directions, chiefly caused by the rivalry existing among all types of managers, the theatre manager arguing that the music halls are getting all the ha'pence while the theatres are getting all the kicks. Well, undoubtedly, at the present moment everything in the nature of drama on the halls is illegal. In fact, it is doubly illegal, for one-act plays are constantly being represented in variety houses without being licensed by the Lord Chamberlain and without being put on in a dramatically licensed building.

"The cause of our troubles is that legislation has not been brought up to date, for when the Act for regulating theatres was passed in 1843, the music hall, as we understand it to-day, did not exist, and there is no modern legislation in existence to cover music hall performances. Therefore, the L.C.C. is compelled to go back to the disorderly house Act of George II., passed in 1751. Part of one clause in this antediluvian survival is as follows:—

"'And whereas the Multitude of Places of Entertainment for the lower Sort of People is another great Cause of Thefts and Robberies as they are thereby tempted to spend their small Substance in riotous Pleasures, and in consequence are put on unlawful Methods of supplying their Wants and renewing their Pleasures: In order, therefore, to prevent the said Temptation to Thefts and Robberies, and to correct as far as may be the Habit of Idleness which is become too general over the whole Kingdom, and is productive of much Mischief and Inconvenience: Be it enacted by the Authority aforesaid, that from and after the First Day of December One thousand seven hundred and fifty-two any House, Room, Garden, or other Place kept for public Dancing, Music, or other public Entertainment of the like Kind, in the Cities of London and Westminster, or within Twenty Miles thereof, without a Licence had for that Purpose from the last preceding Michaelmas Quarter Sessions of the Peace shall be deemed a disorderly House or Place; and no such licence shall be granted at any adjourned Sessions, nor shall any Fee or Reward be taken for any such Licence; and it shall and may be lawful to and for any Constable or other Person, being thereunto authorised by Warrant under the Hand and Seal of One or more of His Majesty's Justices of the Peace of the County, City, Riding, Division, or Liberty where such House or Place shall be situate, to enter such House or Place, and to seize every Person who shall be found therein, in order that they may be dealt with according to Law; and every Person keeping such House, Room, Garden, or other Place, without such Licence as aforesaid, shall forfeit the Sum of One Hundred Pounds to such Person as will sue for the same, and be otherwise punishable as the Law directs in Cases of disorderly Houses.'

"You will note that according to this old Act the licence is to be granted at the Michaelmas Quarter Sessions of the Peace, and it is only at that period of the year that licences are now granted. We grant them about the first week in November. I have set myself the duty of rectifying this cast-iron irrationality, and I shall not rest until the music hall manager is put on the same level of justice as the theatrical proprietor, so that he shall be able to secure a licence at any time of the year, instead of only at one period of the year as at present.

"As a beginning of my crusade, I have placed the following notice of motion on the current week's agenda paper:—'That it be referred to the General Purposes Committee and the Theatres and Music Halls Committee to consider and report as to the advisability of providing, by an amendment of standing orders or otherwise, for music or music and dancing licences to be granted, as in the case of stage plays licences, at any time during the year.'

"There is no power at present which would enable a uniform licence to be granted in London. That object could only be obtained by granting two licences, one for music and dancing and one for dramatic performances. So far as the theatres under the jurisdiction of the Lord Chamberlain are concerned, the settlement of the question would be a matter for agreement between the London County Council and the Lord Chamberlain. The way is made easier for us in the Council, in those places which are entirely under our authority, by the abolition of the rule prohibiting smoking. We have removed the restriction as to smoking, so that in this respect both licences are equal, and the Lord Chamberlain has in many cases followed our lead.

"Another peculiar anomaly is that the same Act of Parliament (of 1843) obtains all over Great Britain, and it has been the custom, under the dramatic licence outside of the London area, to give every kind of performance, music hall or dramatic, without let or hindrance to the manager. It was thought very largely that the Lord Chamberlain's licence covered everything in London, so that a man who held that licence could play whatever he liked in his own building. But the case of the Camden Theatre, and previously of the Empress, Brixton, upset the prevalent idea altogether. We refused the Empress management a music and dancing licence. They immediately obtained an unrestricted licence from the Lord Chamberlain, but when the Lord Chamberlain discovered that his regulations were being violated—in such ways, for instance, as the presentation of an unlicensed programme and the permission to smoke—he withdrew his licence. And now the Camden Theatre case has quite destroyed preconceived notions that the Lord Chamberlain's authority covered everything. When that theatre was turned over to the Gibbons Syndicate, the management gave music hall performances under the Lord Chamberlain's licence, which Mr. Arthur already held. The London County Council did not interfere. The Lord Chamberlain did not interfere. But the outside public invoked the 'protection' of the Act of Parliament, and the Court decided the other day that premises must not be kept open for music and dancing without a music and dancing licence. Thus it would appear that divided authority is the cause of most of our troubles in London. The Camden Theatre and the Brixton Empress had to deal with two different authorities, who licence at different times, and between the two stools they fell.

"I do not see many difficulties for the music hall in Mr. Brandon's proposition, for the variety establishments already play drama without permission, and have music, singing, and dancing, and I do not think that, for a few years to come, there is much likelihood that music hall managers will want to play drama all the evening, as that form of entertainment is somewhat out of fashion just now. In getting a dramatic licence the new music halls would be at no disadvantage, for they are not allowed to sell intoxicating drink now as music halls and they would not be allowed to sell drink as theatres. This would be no loss to them. On the other hand, the poor theatre, when turned into a music hall, has to suffer a penalty for the change without any compensating benefit, for once it becomes a variety house, it loses its drink licence for ever.

"A great hardship would fall upon a certain class of the profession if an all-round licence were granted. Our structural requirements as regards theatres and music halls are identical—if our demands are not complied with a licence is refused—but if we were to grant all-round licences indiscriminately to places such as concert halls and small entertainment establishments, even to the rooms where penny readings are given, we should immediately compel these to comply with our structural regulations, and they would have to come into line with all our stage play licence restrictions. This would have the effect of throwing out of existence hundreds of public halls. It has been suggested that under an all-round licence the regular theatres might fill up a few weeks now and then with variety, particularly at such times as the present, when good dramatic attractions are so plentifully lacking; but it is very doubtful whether they could secure a sufficiently good variety show to fill up even a few weeks, for the reason that the variety syndicates could not afford to allow them to have the talent.

"The difficulty in regard to the drink question is that if the theatres did furnish music hall programmes for a few weeks in the year, they would most likely, speaking from experience, lose their licence to sell intoxicants. They could not go back a month later and say, 'Well, I am now going to play drama, and I want to sell drink again.' The Council would not allow it, because, to take the extreme case of a man playing variety one week and drama the next, it would be absurd for him to take out his drink licence every alternate week, even granting that in opening as a music hall he had not destroyed his qualification for a licence by the mere fact that his theatre had become a new music hall. The London County Council has not granted a drink licence to a new music hall since 1897, and apparently it will never grant another.

"And while speaking on the subject of drink, I may be permitted to say that the two-houses-a-night system as applied so successfully to music hall entertainments has been an immense influence in the direction of temperance—a far greater influence than all our legislators and all our 'temperance' orators and 'temperance' societies have ever brought to bear. These music halls are more attractive than the public-houses, for in them a man and his wife can get a decent lounge seat for sixpence, and a comfortable seat in some for twopence. Indeed, the modern demand for comfort has been largely created by these music halls, and any fresh buildings of the kind or any old buildings that are modernised will have to be erected, appointed, and furnished on a similarly luxurious scale.

"Theatre managers make a great many complaints as to the music hall people acting illegally in giving their entertainments, but so far as the London County Council is concerned, the theatre managers have got all they have asked for, and if they want anything more it is for them to press for it. If they desire to put the law into operation in regard to the production of sketches on the halls, it is perfectly open to them to do so. But, of course, if they don't move, they cannot expect the Council to move for them."

THE EXETER HIPPODROME.

Exeter's new Hippodrome is the spacious building known in the past as the Royal Public Rooms, and it may safely be said that Mr. Fred Karno and Mr. A. H. Edwards, the proprietors, need have no fear of the success of their venture. The success is all the more creditable having regard to the rush—a word that surely describes accurately the preparations—with which the Hippodrome was finally presented to the public. The man in the street had hardly heard of it before the date of the opening night was announced, and the bold enterprise which has been shown in this strenuous mode of preparation is just the kind of thing to win popular favour. Though, so far as the interior of the building is concerned, a few final touches are yet to be added, something of a record has already been made in the establishment of Exeter's Hippodrome.

On Monday night there were crowded audiences at the two houses. The orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Dudley Powell, is a well-balanced one, and the general arrangements are excellent. Bert Terrell, in Dutch outfit, first that of the Dutch peasant lad, made an original opening turn, and his best hit was his mimicry of the singing of his Dutch maid. Archie Royer, a Yankee comedy acrobat, is quite above the ordinary, and his magic-like knee-somersaults have seldom been attempted. A versatile little artist, Archie Royer has sufficient of the comedian's spirit to give a quaint, original touch to his exceptional acrobatic skill. Ivy Proudfoot, the third turn, met with a cordial reception, for she has already been a favourite pantomime artist in Exeter. Austin Lenton and Agnes Lane, in their comedy concoction Unconsidered Trifles, were responsible for some smart topical patter; and a lot of cheering in all parts of the house announced the next turn, Exeter's favourite "Rabbits." The same old "Rabbits," he delighted his audience with many of the drolleries with which the name of "Rabbits" is inseparable. Ruhart, an amusing comedian and trickster, assisted by La Belle Rosalind, provoked continuous laughter. Jack Pleasants, who impersonates the adult "Simple Simon," and tells of a "converted Scot in hallelujah kilts," is quite an original turn; while The Dandies, presented by Mr. Henry J. Corner, and including Miss Margaret Mackintosh, Miss Josephine Gordon, Mr. Edward Whitehall, and Mr. Stephen Fitzgerald, are essentially the star turn of the week. As vocalists they are par excellence, but their contribution owes its main strength and effectiveness to its variety. It is the best turn of its kind we have seen. Excellent Bioscope Pictures wind up a programme of exceptional merit.

"Connemara," Messrs. Lawrance, Gifford, and Mellor's latest number, will add more fame to the Feldman firm, and will be everywhere Christmas.

At the Hippodrome, Scarborough, the Five Jolly Bakers give a fine acrobatic exhibition which goes well; Gracie Graham sings her songs delightfully, and is an artist with a future before her; Tray and Rich submit a turn which is full of humour; Archie Pitt is amusing in his songs; and Rousby and Rene make a decided success of their sketch Fine Feathers. Iris Banfield, comedienne, and Cavalli, ventriloquist, also appear.

THE L.C.C. AND AMUSEMENTS.

The weekly meeting of the London County Council was held on Tuesday at the County Hall, Spring Gardens, Mr. R. A. Robinson (chairman) presiding.

STEAM ORGANS, &c.

The Local Government Committee reported as follows:—

"On July 19, 1898, the Council made a bye-law which provides that no person shall in any street or on any land adjoining or near thereto keep or manage, or cause to be kept or managed, a shooting gallery, swing boat, roundabout, or any other construction of a like character, so as to cause obstruction or danger to the traffic of any such street.

"This bye-law is in the same terms as a bye-law in force in Middlesex, and it will be observed that the offence consists in the causing of obstruction or danger to the traffic in any street. The Camberwell Metropolitan Borough Council has asked the Council to amend the bye-law so as to make it an offence to keep or manage a shooting gallery, swing boat, roundabout, or any other construction of a like character, in such a manner as to cause annoyance to, or disturbance of, residents or passengers; and the request is supported by twelve other metropolitan borough councils.

"When the existing bye-law was under consideration, the Secretary of State expressed the opinion that care should be taken to avoid interfering with the amusements of the poorer classes, except for strong and substantial cause. Having carefully considered the request of the metropolitan borough councils, we have arrived at the conclusion that a sufficiently strong case has not been made out to warrant an extension of the scope of the bye-law in the way suggested. We recommend—'That the Council does not see its way at present to amend its bye-law in regard to steam organs, shooting galleries, roundabouts, &c.; and that the Camberwell Metropolitan Borough Council, which requested the Council to amend the bye-law, and the metropolitan borough councils who supported the request be so informed.'"

The recommendation came before the Council after 7 o'clock, when only unopposed business was taken, and being opposed, the consideration was adjourned until the next meeting.

NEW MEMBER.

The Theatres and Music Halls Committee recommended that the vacancy caused by the resignation of Mr. Walter Reynolds be filled by the appointment of Dr. J. Davies. Agreed to.

EMPRESS THEATRE, BRIXTON.

The Theatres Committee reported that they had considered a drawing submitted by Mr. B. Crewe, showing a proposal to heat the stage at the Empress Theatre, Carlton-grove, Brixton, by means of coils of hot-water pipes extending round the walls, and to thicken the walls of the scene-dock.

The recommendation was approved.

FRANCO-BRITISH EXHIBITION

The Theatres Committee reported:—

"The Council on November 22, 1907, granted to Mr. Imre Kiralfy a provisional licence for music and dancing for the Franco-British Exhibition. The Exhibition opened on May 14 last, when the arrangements were to some extent incomplete, and could not be considered altogether satisfactory from the point of view of public safety. We were consequently not in a position to advise the Council to confirm the licence, although at the same time we did not consider it necessary to recommend the prohibition of the opening of the Exhibition, as the licensee gave us his assurance that any work required by the Council would be done without delay. In consequence of additions being continually made to the exhibits it was necessary to make repeated additions to the requirements. The arrangements may now be regarded as practically satisfactory, but some of the requirements originally made have been modified or waived on account of the special circumstances connected with the present Exhibition, and the inauguration of an enterprise of such magnitude. The whole question will therefore have to be reconsidered if the buildings are used another year, so that the Council may be fully satisfied with the arrangements before the buildings are again opened to the public, and an intimation to this effect has already been given to the licensee. We recommend—'That the provisional licence for music and dancing granted on Nov. 22, 1907, to Imre Kiralfy for the Franco-British Exhibition be confirmed; that notice of such confirmation be endorsed on the licence; and that the seal of the Council be affixed to such endorsement.'"

The recommendation was opposed, and Sir John Benn, M.P., asked the chairman of the Committee if he was aware of certain scandals that had arisen in connection with the Exhibition.

Mr. Greenwood, chairman of the Committee, in reply, said he was not aware of any scandals at the Exhibition in connection with public health, and he ventured to think that the reports with regard to alleged inconveniences had been enormously exaggerated. It was absolutely impossible for adequate provision to be made for a varying attendance of between 10,000 and 300,000 people.

Sir John Benn said he would take an early opportunity of fully setting forth the case.

LONDON PAVILION.

The Committee reported they had considered a drawing, submitted by Messrs. Wylson and Long, showing proposals to remove one box on each side of the balcony, to remove a refreshment bar on the prompt side of the balcony, and to extend the saloon bar at the London Pavilion. They recommended, "That the Council has no objection to the arrangements shown on the drawing submitted." Agreed to.

KILBURN VAUDEVILLE THEATRE.

The Committee had considered a drawing, submitted by Mr. W. G. R. Sprague, showing a proposal to provide a limelight room on each side of the auditorium at the grand circle level at the Kilburn Vaudeville Theatre, High-road, Kilburn. They recommended, "That the Council has no objection to the arrangements shown on the drawing submitted." Approved.

CONCERT HALL AT TOOTING.

The Committee had considered drawings, submitted by Messrs. Emden, Egan, and Co., showing a concert hall proposed to be erected on the east side of Tooting High-street, and to the south of Selincourt-road, in respect of which hall it is intended to apply for a music and dancing licence. The hall will have accommodation for about 1,440 persons. They recommended "that, provided the works shown on the three drawings submitted be commenced within six months, the Council will be prepared to grant a certificate under section 12 of 41 and 42 Vict., cap. 32, to the owner of such building, on being satisfied that the premises have been completed in accordance with the drawings referred to and the regulations of the Council." Carried.

SHEPHERD'S BUSH EMPIRE.

The Committee had considered a drawing, submitted by Messrs. F. Matcham and Co., showing proposals to construct a counter for the sale of refreshments and to fix a dividing rail in the waiting-room at the Shepherd's Bush Empire. They recommended, "That the Council has no objection to the arrangements shown on the drawing submitted, provided that the whole of the work be executed in fire-resisting materials and completed in detail to the satisfaction of the Council." Approved.

LONDON VARIETY THEATRES.

THE OXFORD.

A triumphant American tour of nearly four years, with recent Continental successes of considerable moment, forms a most agreeable retrospect for Houdini, the man of manacles and the world's greatest exponent of handcuff freeing, and when he returned to the Oxford on Monday he had a reception in every way worthy of his high reputation. The qualities that strike one about such a performer is his complete lack of pretence, his absolute calm, his tremendous energy, and his remarkable pluck. To see him wriggling on the floor of the stage to get rid of a strait waistcoat is a lesson on the virtue of will power directed by an acute and alert brain. He freed himself in the space of 3min. 2sec. A greater and an absolutely original feat was his second, to see which a large committee of spectators was invited on to the stage. A large galvanised iron vessel was filled with water, and after trying complete immersion for a minute or so, Houdini crept into the narrow space a second time, his head being completely covered by water. Attendants then fastened down the lid, by means of six padlocks, and one of them stood with axe in hand ready to prize open the can—now hidden by a tent-like structure—in case of accident. In the space of two minutes Houdini reappeared, the padlocks having been unlocked. He invited members of the audience to bring their own padlocks, stipulating, however, that they shall be quite workable.

Carlton, one of the few illusionists who are funny on the stage, presented for the first time on Monday an interlude that he terms an "operatic agony," entitled The Hankey-homey Showman. The lyrics are from the pen of George Burnley, and the scenery has been painted by George Boden, who has realised with much cleverness the details of a fair ground. Here we see Carlton as a showman—a modern Autolycus—who sells cough-lozenges, and has an amusing conversation with a Scotchman, played with a deal of pawky humour by Mr. Jock Walker. As a "saftie" Mr. Walker adds many mirthful moments, and the magician Carlton has found in him a valuable ally. The tricks of Carlton are performed with that conjurer-comedian's usual facility and bonhomie, and the fun of the whole thing is increasing every night. The stage is brightened by the singing and dancing of sixteen smart and attractive chorus girls.

We have recently noticed Mr. Will Evans's Mrs. Morgan's Cure, which is rousing shouts of laughter nightly. Mr. Charles R. Whittle is displaying the value of a good chorus song in "I want you to see my girl," and Miss Alexandra Dagmar, bright and handsome, has a ditty that is quite up to date, to which she lends the charm of an excellent voice. Miss May Mars holds her own, too, in chorus songs of a most attractive type; and Miss Jessie Preston, mirthful and merry as usual, revels in burlesque and comedy. She is always welcome at the Oxford. Mr. Harry Randall as the "parlour queen" repeats patter nightly to an accompaniment of loud laughter; and other turns include the Carlyles, the O'Gorman Brothers, the Poluski Brothers in Pictures, Miss Helen Trix, Miss José Collins, Mr. Phil Ray, Tate and Tate, Mr. George Robey, and Howard and Collinson. Ruffell's Imperial Bioscope, with fine films, completes a programme upon which Mr. C. Blyth-Pratt, the astute and courteous manager, may be heartily congratulated.

THE STANDARD.

Standard audiences, always well catered for in the matter of sketches, during last week extended a flattering reception to the playlet, Only an Actor, an entertaining little version of the popular play, David Garrick, excellently enacted by Mr. Frank Fenton and company. The principal scene is, of course, that in which Garrick, in fulfilment of a promise to Simon Ingot to cure his daughter, Ada, of her infatuation for the actor, simulates drunkenness, much to the disgust of that lady and the annoyance of the extravagantly-attired Selina Rumbelow and her intoxicated spouse, "naughty little Rummy." Mr. Fenton gave an easy and finished representation throughout of the arduous rôle of Garrick, particularly praiseworthy being his acting in the more serious portions of the playlet, and he was loudly acclaimed at the conclusion. Ada Ingot had a refined and quietly impressive representative in Miss Phyllis Vaughan; Simon Ingot, the prosperous but prejudiced old merchant, who is obliged to finally admit that it is possible for an actor to be a gentleman, was admirably portrayed by Mr. Edgar L. Hocking; Miss Warrington made a droll figure of Selina Rumbelow; and Mr. George Thursby also contributed to the humour of the sketch by his mirth-provoking behaviour as Samuel.

The enterprising burglar is frequently encountered as a prominent character, both in theatrical and music hall playlets, and he is again the principal figure in A Midnight Call, a dramatic incident for which Mr. Arthur Page and company are responsible. The cracksman in this instance is caught in the act of purloining valuables by an ingenuous youngster, who turns out to be his own daughter, but he is prevailed upon to depart without disclosing his identity. Mr. Page made a grimly humorous burglar, and the other parts were ably played. A comedy duologue that evoked almost continuous hilarity was La Belle Florita; or, Will "He" be My Wife? humorously enacted by Brierley and Franklin, an excellent female impersonation being given by one of the twain, his companion contributing a droll representation of an amorously-inclined theatrical manager. Shirley and Ransome submit their entertaining trifle Arf-a-Quid with very successful results, and Mr. Lew Lake and his "colossal company of cunning conspirators," in the well-known episode My Pal Jerry, are immense favourites.

Mr. Will Harris, a hard-working comedian, has a funny number in "I planted it in the garden," and evokes laughter also in another nonsense song; and Mr. George Rapley early in the programme creates merriment with a medley composed of many popular songs. Miss Amy Marsden contributes a ludicrous burlesque of the "Salome" craze, her other low-comedy contribution, "The mocking birds were singing on the tree," also being responsible for hilarity; and Mr. Sid Penna, musical comedian, extracts melody from pickle-jars, property cigars, &c., indulges in spoof conjuring, and employs many ingenious devices to entertain his auditors, and always with success. The Edisonograph has three particularly laughable films in Chase for a Bike, Fido's Taking Way, and Schoolboys' Revolt, and also shows many other interesting subjects; and other entertaining items in Mr. T. S. Dickie's well-diversified bill are given by Miss Queenie West, comedienne, the Northern Troupe of International Dancers, the Sisters Allen, and Stacey and Williams. Mr. Maurice Volny is the courteous and assiduous manager, and Mr. Frederick Allwood conducts the excellent orchestra, the entr'acte on the night of our visit, a selection of the most popular melodies in the répertoire of Mr. Harry Lauder, being much enjoyed.

CROUCH END HIPPODROME.

The excellent programme provided here by the management this week is attracting crowded houses each night. A feature is always made of the orchestral selections, which, under the direction of Mr. Archie Howells, continue to prove a delight to the ear. Metra's "The White Queen" and a selection from "The Casino Girl" are two items given in the current bill. The Sisters Earle afford genuine entertainment with their well-rendered duet "Come back to Erin." Chas. Banks causes considerable diversion by his singing "La diddley," following on with some amusing patter, and concluding his turn by introducing his wonderfully trained dog "Woof," one of the cleverest canines performing on the boards. The refined and dainty comedienne Daisy Hicks is a success, and her rendering of "If you don't want lots of gold" and "I've no right to love you" is very catchy and smart. Harry Rogerson provides about fifteen minutes' genuine fun as a tramp. His burlesque of a drama, in which he enacts (with the aid of a scarecrow), the hero, heroine, and villain is screamingly funny, and although the idea is not new, it is quite one of the best of melodramatic parodies. Adelaide Waldorf, a charming Australian vocalist, puts much artistic feeling into her two songs "Eileen" and "If I should plant a tiny seed of love," and scores a great success.

Another item upon the programme which earns the hearty appreciation of the audience is contributed by Will Morsa, juggler and equilibrist, whose tricks are clever and neatly performed. Much amusement is provided by his comical assistant. The Four Sisters Gilbey appear in a refined musical entertainment, comprising selections on the banjo, guitar, xylophone, piano, and sleigh bells, their turn concluding with a song by one of their number, entitled "Old man moon," followed by a neatly-executed dance. They are one of the most popular features of the programme.

Daisy Jerome sings "Temptation," which gains hearty applause, but appears to better advantage in her comic ditty "A pat of butter" and her latest chorus hit "Do-re-me-fah-so-lah-te-do." Although contributing three songs, the audience clamoured for more, but Miss Jerome, although willing, was unable to comply owing to her other engagements elsewhere. Bi-Bo-Bi, the eccentric musician, is here, and fully merits the applause accorded his turn. C. Emlyn Jones and Co. are appearing this week in a comedy mélange entitled The Harmonic Crank, and the parts are well performed. Special mention should be made of the lady portraying a "slavey," whose comical antics provide much merriment, and also of the artist who appears as a page-boy, with dancing that is clever and neat. Robbie Roy scores as a Scotch comedian, and Clark and Hayden in their musical comedy duologue go extremely well. They are a pair of talented artists, and the lady has a very good voice, and renders her song in an able manner. The concluding item of the programme is the ever-popular Bioscope, with new films.

NEW CROSS EMPIRE.

Casey's Court heads the programme here, and evokes roars of laughter from large audiences, its many amusing incidents and situations being greeted with warm applause. Mr. Ernest Cadle's entertainment is altogether a huge success. The Lupino Brothers, with a contribution entitled The Musician and His Poodle, win much approval for their excellent comedy business; the Stein Eretto troupe of acrobats and hand-balancers arouse enthusiasm with their clever feats so smartly and neatly executed. Miss Hetty King did not appear, much to the disappointment of visitors, but her place was ably filled by Alexandra and Hughes, whose entertainment went with a brightness and smartness that was most enjoyable; the Sisters Morgan, looking most attractive as a sailor and Japanese lady respectively, made a considerable hit with their song entitled "A girl from Japan," and their clever dance won prolonged and well-deserved applause.

Clarke and Hamilton come next on the programme, and this clever couple prove their versatility in patter, song, and dance, which all win general approbation. Clever little Zola comes next with "Four foot two and a bit" and "Whoever would have thought it?" a well-arranged song arranged on nursery rhymes, which caused much amusement. Frank Sylvo, aptly billed as "the quaint comedy juggler," amply justified this description, his clever tricks being executed with neatness and precision, and his business being novel and effective—a fact quickly and generously recognised by the onlookers. Lupino Lane, the clever boy comedian, singer, and dancer, gave his song "Take me on the flip-flap" in capital style, and danced really well. Big Ben Brown and little George Le Clerq appeared with their usual success in the quaint and amusing sketch entitled Black Justice, and were rewarded with unstinted laughter and applause. The Prince Milner Trio are exceptionally good acrobats, and their excellent turn includes hoop-manipulation and wire-walking. Some capital pictures were exhibited on the Bioscope, including a series illustrating the smuggling of opium. The evening's entertainment was a most enjoyable one, and quite up to the high standard of this popular hall, so ably managed by Mr. Ernest Bridgen, who is always courteous and attentive to the patrons of the establishment. He has a capable assistant in Mr. C. Young; while the excellent orchestra is presided over by Mr. Forbes Russell.

RICHMOND HIPPODROME.

No one can complain of the plats served up this week for the delectation of Richmond audiences. The attractions are numerous and there is not a "turn" that fails to win the approval of the audience. Pretty Violet Nunn sings her coon ditties in the now established coon fashion; quite daintily, yet plaintively, she assures the audience she is "Waiting to be given away"—we doubt it. Violet dresses her songs and self artistically. Terpsichore is strongly represented by the Three Sisters Aiston, who sing with no little success and who dance both daintily and cleverly. Their query "Isn't it nice to have someone to love you?" seemed to win an affirmative. Their show is quite good of its kind. The Cabiacs, who deputised for an absentee, immediately "caught on." Really a remarkable couple of contortionists are they; no movement seemed too difficult, and many of their tricks were quite beyond the average. They won a complete and legitimate success, and deserved the triple call they got. Tom Jones, who comes from Cambria, has a fine voice and a good stage presence. Both these he brings to bear on a ditty in which he tells of his matrimonial intentions, and the audience seemed quite to enter into it all and took immediate interest in "Jenny Parry" who was invited "to come downstairs and kiss her Harry," and although Jenny did not respond, the audience sent a salvo of applause along which proved quite as satisfactory. His second ditty dealt with the eccentricities of a Welsh fortune-teller. Tom Jones is a Wag in his way, and proved an acceptable addition to a good bill. The Betrayed Professor is a clever one-man sketch enacted by Leo Carle. In less than ten minutes he makes no less than nine lightning changes, all of which amaze and amuse the audience to a pitch of wonderment and enthusiasm. Leo Carle proves as clever an instrumentalist as he is an artist. An immense amount of interest was centred in the appearance of Miss Madge Temple, the lady who has won a reputation for marvellous confections in hats. This is not quite within our province; but let it be said that Madge has a wonderful voice, and can rely on success without adventitious aid. Her first contribution, "Esau," was splendidly given, the audience joining heartily in the chorus. Her second ditty, "Come, be my rainbow," was capitally done, but scarcely worth the attention of so fine a voice—this by the way—for the audience literally devoured it, and got to work on the chorus in fine form, thanks to the lantern screen. Madge's "hat" came on as an encore. Wonderful! The "king of all strong men on this earth" is naturally an attraction. His name is John Grun Marx, and without doubt this modern Hercules can hold his own against all comers. To watch Marx trifling with an atom 125lb. in weight is worth seeing; nothing seemed to come amiss to him—chains, horse-shoes, and such-like trifles were snapped by him with comparative ease: a fine turn is John Grun Marx. His final feat was to toy with such trifles as twenty-five men, after which no one would have been surprised had he lifted the theatre (we don't want to tempt Marx). Sammy Shields' humour proved irresistible, and his patter is original; this is saying much. His exposition on the Directoire gown is one of the funniest items of the evening. Sammy gossiped pleasantly on spring, dresses, music and kindred topics, and caused roars of laughter. The Bros. Ashley and the Bioscope complete a fine bill. In the front of the house is Mr. H. J. Brett, who is the quintessence of courtesy, and who works hard and is deservedly popular.

HAMMERSMITH PALACE FESTIVAL.

Again we record the passing of another year in Mr. John C. Coe's proprietorship of the above house, and this time, in addition to the congratulations to him on his continued success, comes to one's mind a strong feeling of regret as we understand that this will be the last celebration of the kind under his control. The house is shortly to be taken over by the syndicate over which Mr. Walter Gibbons is the presiding genius.

Each year it has been Mr. Coe's custom to engage a specially strong bill to celebrate the anniversary week, and this year he has outdone all previous bills. On the night of our visit (Tuesday) Mr. Malcolm Scott was away, owing to indisposition. Miss May Moore Duprez, the jolly little Dutch Girl, with her song, "Gretchen they're shouting all the day," her funny patter, clever dancing, and, above all, her infectiously happy personality, proved a great favourite and earned an enthusiastic encore. Miss Marie Kendall has three good chorus songs, "Can't you say nothing else but well?" "Oh, kiss the girl if you're going to," and "She came home on a taximeter cab," all of which proved much to the liking of the audience. Athas and Collins are as good as ever. The dancing of Athas and the singing of Miss Collins evoke a storm of applause. Another most popular pair are The Poluskis, their patter and the song "We're two bashful bounders from Bermondsey" are very funny. The Ten Loonies, in their musical sketch Dotty, give some particularly good playing and much laughable nonsense. Mr. Mark Melford with his company are performing that prime old favourite sketch, My Wife Won't Let Me, which adds much to the evening's enjoyment. That clever and winsome little lady Miss Minnie Mace sings two songs, entitled "Oh, Johnny, there's a locket in your pocket" and "I mean to take her to the Isle of Jamaica," in excellent style. La Freya's artistic visions, with the aid of limelight, are most impressive. A particularly clever balancing act is performed by the Woodwards. The act includes the balancing on the shoulders of a man of a lady on a ladder and on a cycle fixed on the end of a ladder. Mr. Arthur Sutcliffe's song "Have you got another girl like Mary?" has a catchy chorus and goes well. Mr. Will Johnson is rightly described as "lively," and his two songs, "I left a piece behind" and "I'm going to see," are both decidedly good. Some delightful singing is given by Hunter and Marris, their duet "I love you—there's nothing else to say" and the male partner's song "Rose of my life" were both received with great applause. The Celtics are a trio who combine some humorous fooling with the singing of "Sally in our alley." Mr. Steve McCarthy sings "My word, if I catch you bending" and performs a really clever eccentric step-dance. Brierley and Franklin are good in "La Belle Florita," and Mr. George Lennard is an acceptable turn. The Edisonograph presents some excellent films. The orchestral selections are well rendered. That genial gentleman Mr. Manager Lewis Vincent is particularly busy this week looking to the comfort of the extra large crowd of patrons that the above programme is attracting.

GILBERT'S PALACE, EXETER.

Mr. George Gilbert, in conjunction with the British Biograph Company, has recently acquired for a long season the Victoria Hall, and opened on Monday last to a crowded house. For years past Gilbert's Circus has always filled a gap in the entertainment side of the life of Exeter during the winter months. This year Mr. Gilbert resolved to do away with the circus portion of the programme and provide merely a bill of varieties, a movement which was thoroughly justified by Monday night's approval. The hall has been comfortably fitted up to suit all classes, besides being brilliantly illuminated.

Introduced by a capital orchestra, under the conductorship of Mr. H. Wilson, an exhibition of the biograph was given. The Bros. Webb, clever musical clowns, amused the spectators for some time, and the audience could not have enough of them. The exposition of American illustrated songs by the Desmonds appealed in an unmistakable manner; and a comedietta, entitled Other People's Babies, full of amusing incidents, was given by Mr. Harry Marlow and Miss May Manton. Mr. Harry Friskey proved himself a comic juggler of no mean order. The second half opened with an exhibition of Rochez's ponies and dogs, direct from the London Hippodrome, and the performance showed in a marked degree to what a state of perfection animal training can be brought. Mr. Harry Marlow was encored for a couple of comic songs; and the Tennessee Guards, in a scene from camp life, introduced lightning drill and wall scaling. Mr. George Zalva is an excellent manager.

CHARLES AND FREDERICK RENAD IN DUBLIN.

C. and F. Renad and Co., in their farce entitled "The Swiss Express" top the bill at the Empire Theatre this week, and last night a packed house greeted them with warm applause.—The Freeman's Journal, Nov. 3.

Messrs. C. and F. Renad and Co's sketch "The Swiss Express," in three scenes, was the chief turn at the Empire Theatre last night. The staging, acting, and scenery of this production was splendidly done, and the piece proved a decided hit.—The Irish Independent, Nov. 3.

The big piece was, of course, left till the end, because there is a good deal of elaborate scenery required. It is the production by C. and F. Renad and company of an extravaganza called "The Swiss Express," in which there are three scenes—Boulogne-sur Mer and outside a railway station, which brings us to a representation of the Swiss express travelling at a high speed. The piece is full of diverting incidents from start to finish, there being plenty of knockabout "business" and any amount of rollicking humour.—The Daily Express, Nov. 3.

C. and F. Renad and company afforded great amusement in their clever sketch entitled "The Swiss Express." The company is composed of fully a dozen good artists, and their performance, which largely partakes of the character of a pantomime sketch, is rendered the more interesting by the employment of some daring stage accessories, such as a char-à-banc drawn by a horse and a railway train. There were some rather pretty scenes, including Boulogne-sur-Mer, Outside the Railway Station, &c. The story is woven round the adventures of a honeymoon party. There is plenty of incident, and all is effectively used for the purpose of amusing the audience. The sketch, which was received with very great favour, will, no doubt, prove a considerable source of attraction throughout the week.—The Irish Times, Nov. 3.

PIRATED MUSIC.

Henry Bradley, 35, a licensed pedlar, of Grosvenor-street, Camberwell, was charged at Lambeth on Monday with having in his possession for sale ninety-nine pirated copies of various musical works. The prisoner was also proceeded against on a summons in respect of the seizure of some hundreds of copies of pirated music.

Mr. Arthur Preston, chief agent to the Music Publishers' Association, stated that on Saturday evening, in company with Detective-Inspector Ferrett, Detective-Sergeant Hearn, and Mr. F. Mabe, another agent of the association, he kept observation on the prisoner in Camberwell-road. After meeting several well-known hawkers of pirated music in a public-house, the prisoner went to a house. After a time he came out again, and walked into Camberwell-road, where he was stopped and told he would be charged with being in the possession of pirated music. He denied that he had any music upon him, but when he was searched ninety-nine copies of pirated music were found.

Detective-Sergeant Hearn stated that after the prisoner's arrest his room at Grosvenor-street was searched by virtue of a search warrant, and 634 copies of pirated music found. At an address in the Borough, at which the prisoner was accustomed to receive parcels, another 213 copies were found in a portmanteau, making in all 847 copies.

Mr. Hopkins: That is outside the ninety-nine?

Sergeant Hearn: Yes, your worship.

Mr. Preston: This man is a wholesale distributor whom we have been endeavouring to catch for some time.

Prisoner: I have not been selling it wholesale.

Mr. Hopkins: 946 copies strike me as pretty wholesale.

Prisoner: Granted; but you have to buy a lot like that. You can't buy one copy of pirated music. I am only a small man. Mr. Preston knows that some men buy thousands and thousands of copies.

Mr. Hopkins ordered the prisoner to pay fines and costs amounting to £12 2s.

Prisoner: And that settles all the case, sir?

Mr. Hopkins: I am afraid it does. I don't see how to charge you any more.

Upon the application of Mr. Preston, the magistrate made an order for the destruction of all the copies seized.

NEW PALACE, OLDHAM.

Another addition to the list of variety houses of entertainment is to be opened to the public on Monday. It is known as the Palace, Oldham, Ltd., of which Mr. Walter De Frece is the managing director, and Mr. Will Sley, the well-known agent, is also a director. The plans were prepared by Mr. Bertie Crewe, of 75, Shaftesbury-avenue, the well-known theatrical architect, and the structure has been erected by Messrs. W. Brown and Son, of Salford.

The new building is situate in a commanding and central position in Union-street, and of easy access to all parts of the town. Constructed on thoroughly up-to-date principles, the new house will be in every way comfortable and convenient. A perfect view of the stage can be obtained from every part of the auditorium, and the reserved accommodation will include four private boxes, twelve rows of stalls, and thirteen rows in grand circle. The patrons will be able to lounge in richly upholstered tip-up armchairs. Sixteen rows of seats in the pit and fourteen in the gallery will complete a total seating capacity for 2,354 people.

The building has been erected in red brick faced with terra-cotta, and the safety of the public has been studied in every way, in regard both to the construction of the building and its appliances. The interior decorations are of Louis Seize, and the colour scheme will be of very handsome effect. There are refreshment buffets for each part, viz., stalls, pit, circle, and gallery. The theatre will be electrically lighted, while a system of gas-lighting is also laid on in case of failure of the electricity.

The ventilation is on the most approved system, by electric exhaust fans and ducts, and the heating of the auditorium is by gas steam radiators, while that of the stage is low-pressure hot water. There are two distinct exits to each part of the house, there being eight in all, each one leading direct on to the street, thus enabling the audience of all parts to be clear of the house well under three minutes. There is an automatic asbestos fire-proof curtain to the proscenium opening, with a water sprinkler attached. The stage has also a huge skylight, which opens automatically in case of fire.

The auditorium is 70ft. wide and 80ft. deep from curtain to back wall, while the stage is 70ft. wide by 35ft. deep, with a height to grid of 50ft., so that elaborate productions can be accommodated. The artists have also been studied by the provision of ample dressing rooms, which are all well heated, lighted, and ventilated, so that the building generally is one of the most comfortable and convenient of the character in the district.

Great Marlow Fair.

The picturesque town of Great Marlow held its annual fair last week. This fair is divided into two parts, one being held on the "Crown" field, and the other at the far end of the town, in Mr. Porter's meadow. The principal concerns were Ball's cinematograph theatre and palace of varieties and Biddall's Royal bioscope. The machines were Beech's galloping horses and Thomas's steam roundabout; park swings, highfliers, and aerial flights, &c., by various caterers. The other novelties included big wheel, Winchester ranges, bottle batteries, cokers, roll-up boards, &c., by local amusement caterers.

Wellingborough Fair.

This fair was well maintained by Charles Thurston's superb cinematograph theatre and variety exhibition, Barker and Thurston's motor-car track, Charles Shaw's gallopers, Mrs. Hearn's steam horses, and Elias Harris's big boats. The other novelties were Winchester ranges by Westrop and Hearn, rifle saloons, bottle smashers, Emma and coker sheets, houp-la's, and all the fun of the fair, by Messrs. Westrop, W. Hearn, Norman, Westrop, Harris, and Johnson.

Kidwelly "Mop."

This ancient (St. Luke's) fair was held on Oct. 29. The weather this year was fine, and there was a good attendance. The shows were the cinematograph theatre and palace of varieties by Steel Barry, Professor Leon's school of boxers, and D. Boswell's novelty booth. Messrs. H. Studt and Sons were again present with their switchback, gondolas, galloping horses, and motor-car set; White's steam yachts, swings, and big boats; and park swings by D. Boswell. Amongst the smaller novelties were W. North's Winchester range, rifle saloons, and bottle batteries, &c.

Sid White's Carnival at Maerdy.

In addition to the well-known novelties and fairground varieties of this combination, Mr. White is introducing in the electric bioscope theatre Pathé's latest production—living pictures of the Franco-British Exhibition, including realistic presentations of the flip-flap, the scenic railway, the Elite Gardens, the Court of Honour, and a beautiful picture of the motor-boats on the circular lake. Amongst the variety turns, and still going very strong, is Mazzoni, the handcuff king, in a new mystery and great barrel act; and Walter Gibbons, vocalist, in song illustrations. The living pictures are described by Mr. Ted Holloway, whose long dramatic experience and stage ability enables him to illustrate the pictures with dramatic force. Mr. Alf. Shirley, advance business-manager, was at the piano.

George Wombwell.

The whole of the London and provincial Press acknowledge with gratification the immediate steps taken by The Era to place before the general public the true state of affairs with regard to George Wombwell, the nonogenarian showman, and nephew of the great George Wombwell. It is recognised with unanimity that Mr. E. H. Bostock has done not only the right thing, but the generous thing, in taking the matter up in the adequate manner he has done. It gives us great pleasure to record that, quite spontaneously and without any knowledge whatever that action was being taken in the matter, Mrs. Flora Collins, who is travelling with the No. 1 Wonderland show, wired to her husband, who was at Rotherham Fair with some of their big machines and other concerns, asking him to immediately obtain old George Wombwell's release from the infirmary, and that she would put him in a home and provide for him for life. The generosity of this action is not only a warm testimony to the good heart of Mrs. Collins, but it is another proof amongst ten thousand of the comradeship of the road and the kindly and practical charity which animates the showman world. Of course Mr. E. H. Bostock, whilst appreciating the expression of kindly anxiety and sympathy to the old man, will reserve to himself the duty of providing for the remaining days of the old showman's life.

The World's Fair, 1908-9.

By reference to our advertising columns, we note Mr. T. E. Read, the enterprising lessee of the popular World's Fair, is endeavouring to add the exhilarating pastime of skating to his otherwise numerous attractions this season. This is another up-to-date move, and keeping pace with the times; and skating enthusiasts, unable to skate on rivers, lakes, and ponds, consequent on the vagaries of the weather, will find ample opportunity to do so at the World's Fair skating rink, where possibly a series of carnivals will be arranged.

The big sale of the working plant and animals of the Wild West show, at New Brighton, will be of special interest to the circus world. The sale itself is dealt with at length in our advertising columns in this issue.

Kinematograph regulations respecting the use of the kinematograph in theatres and halls, also the regulations respecting the use of limelight, can be had, price 1d. (by post 1½d.), from The Era Offices, 8, Tavistock-street, W.C. All those who handle the kinematograph or limelight should possess a copy of these regulations.

THE SHOWMAN'S GUILD AT ROTHERHAM FAIR.

The annual public meeting of the Guild at Rotherham Statutes Fair is regarded by the people of the good old town as an event of considerable importance. Almost immediately after the foundation of the Guild meetings were held at the "Statutes," and without a break have been continued to the present time. Very valuable support has been given to the Guild by the people of Rotherham, for in the times of great anxiety, when George Smith and his supporters were endeavouring to penalise the showmen's life and business, Rotherham took a very strong line in defending the showmen against the attacks of the puritanical party.

The meeting this year was more than usually successful, owing to the extremely fine weather. For several years past bad weather has prevailed, with the inevitable consequence that in point of numbers the meeting suffered. This year, however, Mr. G. H. Kemp's magnificent new show, the Cinema Theatre Unique, was crowded with a highly-appreciative audience to listen to the Rev. T. Horne's address on the work of the Guild. The Mayor of Rotherham (Dr. G. H. Lodge) had intended taking the chair, but was prevented being present when the meeting was timed to commence; he, however, arrived shortly afterwards. In the absence of the Mayor Mr. R. T. Heath was elected as chairman, and in introducing the Guild Chaplain, referred in very complimentary terms to the record of good work which Mr. Horne had left behind him in Rotherham and the surrounding district. He felt confident that the very fact that Mr. Horne was announced to address a Rotherham audience had revived memories of the strenuous work Mr. Horne had carried on during the time that he was curate of Whiston.

They all rejoiced to have Mr. Horne amongst them again; but not only because they appreciated the work he had done in their own town, but on account of the great work he was carrying on throughout the country amongst the showpeople. Here was a great work to which their old friend had so thoroughly committed himself as to win their entire sympathy. He was quite sure that in the address which he would now call upon the Guild Chaplain to deliver they would have interesting patriculars of the great good the Showmen's Guild was accomplishing under his leadership and direction. (Applause.)

On rising to deliver his address Mr. Horne was received with cheers, and after a humorous allusion to the flight of years and to the fact that he was growing grey in the service of the Guild, expressed the great pleasure it was to him, year by year, to renew acquaintance with his many friends and former neighbours in Rotherham. The growth and development of the Guild, and its many departments of useful work, were closely connected with the meeting, which had been held for well nigh twenty years past at their Statutes Fair; they would all remember that in its essential constitution the Guild is a Trades Union. It was started, and is still maintained, for the necessary work of trade protection. It was the persecution of mistaken faddists and fanatics twenty years ago that drove the showmen into combination.

That, however, was ancient history. There were, however, two extremely interesting developments of the work of the Showmen's Guild that actually originated at Rotherham Fair.

The Education of the Showman's Child.

The first of these two great enterprises concerned child life at the fairs, and it was to obtain justice for the parents of show children that an appeal was made to the then Education Minister to open the schools and to afford educational facilities to the showman's child. Here he felt compelled to again explain that the great bulk of the children of showmen and fairground traders were educated in the ordinary way at the schools of the towns where the showpeople had their permanent homes, for it must never be forgotten that 90 per cent. of the amusement caterers travelling from fair to fair, had two homes—the one on wheels, which was really part of the working plant of the show, and their fixed home, just like other people, in some town that experience had proved to be the best centre for their yearly circuit of the fairs. It was at these permanent homes that the showmen's children were kept until they had passed their standards at school like other children.

There were, however, a few children for whom the possibility of reasonable facilities to attend school when they were compelled to travel with their parents, was desirable. When he was stationed at Whiston, Rotherham, the Right Honourable A. H. Dyke-Acland was Educational Minister and Member for Rotherham, and, in the interests of the few children that necessity compelled to be with their parents at the fairs from time to time, he wrote to the Education Minister, and explained the hindrances that the parents had met with by having the school door closed against the children. Under the old code only the children who were able to attend regularly and to pass examinations were able to earn the school grant.

Increased Facilities for the Showman's Child.

The injustice which existed under the old code was practically dealt with by Mr. Acland, and the code was so altered by the abolition of the old method of payment by results only after individual examination that school managers were encouraged to admit casual scholars because every attendance, however casual, was counted for additional grant, and the examination was by chosen scholars from each division in the school, and not of necessity the examination of every child on the register. This, they would see at once, opened the doors of the schools and encouraged school managers to give the showman's child a little education by the way. (Applause.)

He well remembered the bad old days when every school door in the country was closed against the casual or occasional scholar. A child who did not count for increased grant was rigidly excluded. It had always been to him a gross injustice, and adding insult to injury, when the would-be reformers of the showman's life in the early days of their organisation, had held up the showman to public contumely as being a negligent parent, densely ignorant himself and not caring for the education of his child; the real fact of the case being that until Mr. Acland altered the code, every school in the country refused occasional scholars.

Guild Services at the Fairs.

Another department of the Guild's work of great moment also originated at Rotherham Statutes, and that was the starting of showmen's services at the fair. He well remembered the very first service held in a show booth, with the sanction and blessing of the Archbishop of York and the co-operation of the then Vicar of Rotherham. In the year 1891, on the Rotherham Statutes Sunday, the showmen at the fair chartered brakes, and drove over to Whiston, and quietly took possession of the church, and just as ordinary worshippers took part in the morning service. They had given no notice of their intention, but it was a spontaneous act of recognition on their part of some little work which he had been permitted to do for them. That desire on their part to identify themselves with the Church of God led him the following year to enlist the co-operation of the Vicar of Rotherham and to organise a service on the fair ground in a show booth. That was the commencement of the spiritual ministries which he was proud to render to the showpeople. That was the inauguration of the Guild services on the fair grounds. (Applause.)

The Showmen's Appeal for Public Support and Sympathy.

Proceeding, the Chaplain asked for the support and sympathy at that public meeting with regard to another attack on the showmen's character and life. It was George Smith's Movable Dwellings Bill twenty years ago, and the persecution arising out of the agitation against show life which Smith and his supporters then raised that forced the showmen to combine in a Trades Union. He was present again, and, after twenty years' work amongst the travelling showpeople, was there to ask their sympathy in a similar emergency as the one of twenty years ago—to beg their support against a similar proposal—another Movable Dwellings Bill—introduced into the House of Lords during the present Session of Parliament. All the bad proposals of George Smith's Bill were repeated in the new measure, with additional clauses of a more tyrannical and injurious nature.

Briefly stated, the Movable Dwellings Bill sought to impose insulting and invidious restrictions upon the domestic and business life of vandwellers. The greatest injustice of all was that van-dwellers were held up to public reprobation as being outlaws—a class apart from the ordinary sanctions and securities of the law of the land. The greatest outrage of all was taking the administration of the Sanitary and Health Laws from the expert officers competent to deal with the questions of health and sanitation, and making the County Police the authority to administer the laws of health and sanitation with regard to vans and tents, and not the Medical Officer of Health and the Sanitary Officer. They would see at once that this was class legislation of the worst possible kind, for, under existing law, every movable dwelling was as much under the control of the local authorities for both health and sanitation as immovable ones.

The Resolution Against the Bill.

Knowing full well as he did the kindly feeling towards the travelling showmen in the town of Rotherham, and that public opinion upon many previous occasions had expressed itself strongly against class legislation, he concluded by asking the meeting to approve of the following resolution: "That this public meeting, held at Rotherham Statute Fair, heartily approves of the work of the Showmen's Guild. Furthermore, it strongly deprecates legislation like the Movable Dwellings Bill now before Parliament as being not only invidious and class legislation, but as an invasion of the rights and liberties of showpeople."

The resolution was seconded, supported, and carried unanimously.

The Complimentary Votes.

The Mayor of Rotherham, in rising to propose a vote of thanks to the Rev. T. Horne, regretted that he had not been able to arrive in time to take the chair; that, however, was not the loss of the meeting, but entirely his own, as they had had an admirable chairman in Mr. Heath. He desired to express the great pleasure he had had in being present and hearing Mr. Horne's exiremely interesting address. He, like all those present, had known of Mr. Horne and his work for many years, and he was confident that he was only expressing the general desire of the meeting when he expressed the hope that that work might grow and prosper and be a continued blessing to the show people, to whose interests Mr. Horne had given so much of his life. It was to him a pleasure to move that the best thanks of the meeting be accorded to the Guild Chaplain for his admirable address that day. (Applause.)

A working-man, in the body of the meeting, in a highly eulogistic speech, bearing a special reference to the work Mr. Horne had done when Curate of Whiston amongst the colliers, seconded the vote; a work, he said, which he and his fellow-miners would never forget. (Cheers.) They were proud to have Mr. Horne again amongst them, and year by year they eagerly looked for his presence and encouraging words at the Guild meeting on the fairground. He heartily seconded the vote of thanks proposed by the Mayor. (Great applause.)

Other speeches were made of a complimentary character in support of the resolution, which was put to the meeting and carried with acclamation.

The Rev. T. Horne suitably responded, and moved a similar compliment to the Chairman, which was carried unanimously, and the meeting terminated.

Guild Service on the Fair Ground.

The organising chaplain to the Guild preached at St. Michael's Church, Rotherham, at the morning service, and again assisted at evensong at the same church. In accordance with custom, the choir of St. Michael's, with the members of the orchestra attached to the church, very kindly assisted the Rev. T. Horne in the Guild service on the fairground after evensong. Kemp's show was crowded from end to end by a most attentive and devout congregation, including a great number of the showpeople at the fair. The musical part of the service was well rendered by the church choir and St. Michael's orchestra; the organist of the church accompanied on a portable organ. The singing of the glorious hymns by the great congregation was most impressive, and the memory of the service will linger long in the minds of those who were privileged to take part in it. The honorary local chaplain, the Rev. H. Greenway, is suffering from a serious breakdown in health, and is ordered away for a long rest. The result was that for the first time his most valuable assistance at the service was keenly missed. The Rev. T. Horne, Guild Chaplain, conducted the service throughout, and preached a sermon on the Holy Gospel for the day (the Festival of All Saints), taking for his theme the "Beatitudes" as the rule of citizenship for the Commonwealth of the Saints of God.

Mr. and Mrs. G. H. Kemp not only placed their show at the disposal of the Guild, but the working staff generously rendered every possible help in making both the afternoon and evening gathering of the Guild the great success that they undoubtedly were. It is such gatherings as these that brings the showman and his life into nearer union and fellowship with the life of the nation.

The commanding feature facing the crowd at the end of the avenue we have just described was President George Kemp's entirely new show—the cinema theatre de luxe—the very last and greatest thing in portable cinematograph theatres. The whole equipment of this show is entirely new. The superbly beautiful orchestraphone front, with massive brass balustrade entrances, is a perfect gem amongst the many gems from the same atelier. Mr. Kemp is to be complimented on his up-to-date enterprise, and Ch. Marenghi et Cie, of Paris, on the perfect artistry that this front displays. The recherché and sumptuous fittings and decorations are delightful, the greater part of the interior being furnished with comfortable seats upholstered in rich plush velvet, and so constructed that it makes a perfect auditorium, every visitor having a good view of the stage. Down to the very smallest detail Mr. Kemp has provided a theatre second to none in the United Kingdom.

The Line of Shows, Big and Little.

Next to Kemp's new show stood Mr. P. Collins, jun.'s magnificent concern, the Marenghi orchestraphone, front equal in artistry and beauty of design and finish with the one we have already described was a special feature of Mr. Kemp's show; it has additional dignity and spaciousness of aspect in the beautiful porphyry pillars with richly carved and floriated capitals, that fitly frames the beautiful front. Here, again, we have a show that marks the very best and the most up-to-date features of modern enterprise on the fair ground. If ever it is true that comparisons are odious, it is certainly doubly true when you have at the same fair (as were seen at Rotherham) four of the most complete and up-to-date portable theatres now before the British public—all of them new within the last twelve months. Next to Collins's show stood the two splendid concerns (in all their glory of rich carved gilt work, beautiful paintings, and orchestraphone organs) of Messrs. Farrar and Tyler, the No. 1 and the No. 2 concerns of this enterprising firm. We are only expressing the most elementary truth when we say that these four shows are enough to draw any town, and to make, as they made at Rotherham, an irresistible attraction that crowded the fairground every night they were open.

Most Interesting Side Shows.

A delightful show, and one that deserves a special word of commendation from us, is the mechanical promenade of Mr. Pattison. We should rejoice to see many more exhibitions of this character at our fairs, and we congratulate Mr. Pattison, not only on the intrinsic worth and originality of his show, but on the enterprise which led him to bring it on to the fair grounds. It consists of a dozen or more moving models, worked by electric motors, and illustrating the working of coal mines, deep sea diving, river and ocean dredging, and other industries. Together with these, Mr. Pattison exhibits interesting miniature model groups, taken from tragic historical incidents. There are also models in wax of famous statesmen, national heroes, and notabilities.

The Westwood giant children were again a great attraction at Rotherham. Master Wilfrid, the astounding giant boy, and Miss Ruby, his giant sister, held receptions, and much amazement was provoked when these extraordinary children were seen on the platform with the rest of the members of the Westwood family.

Mr. J. Hastings' midget marvels still delight the British public wherever they are exhibited, and that charming little lady, Princess Lilliput, exhibited by Professor E. Ball, was also again a triumph in public favour.

Professor and Mme. d'Osta have provided a new sensation by giving their second-sight demonstration, with Mme. d'Osta in a den of lions. This is one of the most remarkable achievements of occultism now before the public. After the second-sight séance young Maccomo put the lions through a most realistic performance. This show is another example of the up-to-date enterprise that marks our fairs.

The other side-shows were a Haunted Castle, Mr. T. White's two ground booths—the animal jungle and the fine art gallery—and that remarkable freak of nature, the French giant youth "humain Coloss."

The Galaxy of Riding Machines.

In the centre of the ground stood the following high-class roundabouts and machines:—John Collins' four-abreast galloping horses, the razzle-dazzle or Japanese airship, and the twin ships in the air; P. Collins' Gordon-Bennett motor-car set and the latest novelty, the rollicking porkers; A. Richards' Brooklyn cake-walk machine; Morley's bike track; Beach's aeroplanes; W. Shaw's steam swings; and Dunwell Johnson's steam swings.

The other sides of the fairground were occupied by the bazaars of Messrs. Gledstone and Parkinson, Gunthorpe's photo saloon, and throwing games by Messrs. Peters, Townend, Middlebrook, Whatmore, Illingworth, Gallagar, Cooper, and Fawcett. The juvenile horses were by Middlebrook and Johnson; pannum stalls by Mrs. Ryland Wright, and others; and refreshment saloons by Hutchinson and many local caterers.

Special Benefit for the Guild Funds.

By arrangement with the lessee and the principal show proprietors at Rotherham Fair, benefit performances were given at all the shows and upon all the machines. The general understanding was that the shows should give one performance and the machines one full hour's takings. Although the time fixed upon was a slack hour at the beginning of the evening on the last day of the Fair, it resulted in the very acceptable and useful sum of £20 1s. 8d. being added to the amount of the Parliamentary Defence Funds for the purpose of opposing the Movable Dwellings Bill. We venture to express the hope that the good example of giving benefit performances set by Messrs. Collins Brothers at Rotherham and other fairs, and by Messrs. George Green and Wilmot in Scotland, will be followed by other lessees and show proprietors, and that all interested in the maintenance of the business of the fairground will co-operate in this most obvious method of strengthening the defence funds of the Trade Society.

THE LATE FRANK MACKLIN AND JOHN HUGHES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE ERA.

Sir,—Having only this afternoon heard of the death of my old friend and comrade, Mr. Frank Macklin, the old-established, well-known, and esteemed amusement caterer and roundabout proprietor of Kent and Sussex, I herewith ask you, through the columns of The Era, to convey to all the family, relatives, and friends of the deceased my sincere regret and heartfelt sympathy with them in their irreparable loss, knowing as I do, after twenty-five years of his friendship, jovial, yet at the same time modest and God-fearing, disposition, that I am not the only one by a great number that will miss him. He was undoubtedly one of the best. I am also greatly grieved to hear, at the same time, of the death, at so early an age, of that well-known and promising athlete, Mr. Johnnie Hughes, who up to the time of his unexpected death, had, indeed, promise of a great future before him. My deep sympathy and regret also goes out to the father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Hughes.

ROTHERHAM STATUTES.

Although the origin of this fair is well nigh lost in the mists of antiquity, there still remains, even under most modern conditions, a great amount of its ancient privilege. For example, it is still, although in a diminishing quantity, a real "statutes" or hiring fair. Although South Yorkshire is fast becoming the greatest centre of the coal industry in the county of "many acres," there still remains a considerable agricultural industry, and farm servants are in great demand. In this matter, it is interesting to note that for many years past the possible evils of the gathering together of young men and women at a "hirings" fair are provided against by a committee of ladies, who kindly provide a large room where the young women may be seen and hired, instead of taking the usual course of standing in the open market place until someone hires them.

The Compelling Power of a Great Tradition.

The custom of attending the hirings fair, whether to be hired or not, is so deep-rooted in the mind and in the habits of life of the common people that upon the actual statutes day (always the Monday nearest to the festival of All Saints) the whole of the great works, whether engineering shops, steel iron foundries, or coal mines, are set down, and the entire working population, together with the agricultural labourers, "hastes to the fair."

"Heigh ho, and away we go,

Up to thirty years ago the fair spread itself along the main streets of the quaint old town, gaily decked stalls stretched along Westgate, High-street, the Market-square, and other thoroughfares on the direct route to the old Corporation fair ground. From the picturesque point of view, those were indeed the palmy days of the statute fair. On the old fairground itself year by year were found some of the best shows travelling the country.

The Passing of the Fair from Corporation Control.

The growth of municipal trading and enterprise compelled the Corporation of Rotherham to absorb a large portion of the old fairground, in order to erect gas-works. Other important developments of Corporation enterprise, demanding a central situation, year by year enroached upon the fair ground, until at last, some dozen years ago, there was hardly enough ground left to erect half a dozen concerns. In the meanwhile the Corporation had forbidden the erection of stalls in the streets. Under these conditions, for lack of ground space the fair was threatened with speedy extinction.

Foreseeing this contingency, Messrs. P. and J. Collins secured a short lease of a large piece of ground in Greasboro'-road. This spacious fair ground, during the time that the Corporation held the fair, driven by their own necessities to absorb the old ground, saved not only the people's fair from gradual extinction, but also secured what was to the workers a greater consideration, another of their fast-dwindling local holidays.

The Removal of the Fair to Station-road.

By an extremely fortunate circumstance, when the Greasboro'-road site was becoming very difficult to retain for fair ground purposes Mr. John Collins secured the lease of a most admirable site for the annual fair in the very centre of the town, on a vacant plot of land near to the Great Central Railway station. From every point of view it is impossible to imagine a better situation, or one less likely to provoke opposition from the residents in the immediate neighbourhood, than the splendid fair ground under Mr. John Collins's sole control.

The fair of 1908, with regard to weather, has been a record one; and also, when we take into consideration the serious element of unemployment and working short time in the staple industries of the district, it has been good from a business point of view. When we visited the fair, on the last night, a night that is usually but thinly attended, it was impossible to get along, except by being carried in the surging stream of people spreading like a vast flood along the main arteries of the fair. It was also satisfactory to notice that during the busy hours of the evening everyone seemed to be doing good business. The larger shows and machines were thronged with eager patrons, and long queues of people were waiting their turn for the next performance or the next exciting spin round on the machine novelties.

All the Jolly Fun of the Fair.

Entering the fairground at the Station-road avenue, the visitor passed along a well-ordered line of gingerbread stalls, shooting galleries, throwing games, and toy bazaars, stretching the whole length of one side of the great square of the ground. These were provided by Wright and Co., G. Wright, Mrs. Mulherne, J. Fossett, G. H. Cornwell, W. Ratcliffe, T. Lever, W. Pullen, J. Johnson, J. W. Turner, W. Stewart, W. Shaw, Mrs. Seed, and other caterers.

W. C. Burns, the well-known experienced caterer, concluded the long period of eight months with his fine picture show at Cook's Circus, Edinburgh, on Saturday last, Oct. 31, which says a good deal for his enterprise and energy. Friday, the 30th, was set down for Mr. Burns' benefit, on which occasion he was assisted by twenty-five turns, most of which were his contest pupils during the season. The huge building, capable of accommodating 3,000 persons, was packed with a most orderly and appreciative audience, who sought admission as early as 5.30, the programme, on account of its inordinate length, running without a break from 7.30 to 11.40. Fireworks from roof of circus announced the opening of the doors at 6.15. A fine orchestra also discoursed excellent music in accompaniment to the pictorial items. Mr. Burns, although suffering from a very bad cold, which detained him indoors for four previous days, appeared and sang in fine style some classical character songs, his appearance being the signal for prolonged—several seconds—applause. Mr. Burns also presented the first thousand persons entering with a very finely-executed cabinet photograph of himself, along with his song-book.

During the evening Mr. John Henry Cooke, the proprietor of the circus, stepped upon the stage, and amidst exciting applause presented Mr. Burns with a valuable silk umbrella, accompanying same with laudatory compliments as to his conduct of the pictures and contests for such a long period, so successful in the face of such heavy opposition during all the summer. Unique floral tributes were also handed to Mr. and Mrs. Burns on the stage from the Cook family and several other local admirers, and amidst many manifestations of regret the season thus terminated on Saturday, Oct. 31.

Mr. Burns continues as manager (his second season) with Mr. Cooke during his equestrian season, which opens upon Saturday, Nov. 21. It might also be noted that the sensational excitement created by Mr. Burns' Marathon races (Sept. 26 and Oct. 17) through the streets—seven miles—will not be soon forgotten, he being the only entertainer ever even to think of, let alone organise and carry out, such a novelty.

FILM GOSSIP.

Showmen and Managers throughout the United Kingdom, and in every English-speaking country, will find in this column particulars of some of the best and newest Films in the Market. Many of these Films we have seen ourselves, and can confidently recommend showmen to add them to their list of attractions.

Pathé Frères.

THE SUBSTITUTE.—There is plenty of fun in this film. Young Blunderer is a merry student, who does not want to get married yet, in spite of a letter just received from a wealthy aunt, who practically commands him to marry a girl of her own choice whom she is sending him from the country, accompanied by her father and mother. Blunderer, who is just having a lady friend to dinner, does not know what to do, until a happy idea makes him take the place of his servant, while the man is to receive the uninvited guests and play the master's part. But Jack takes advantage of the situation and orders Blunderer to serve the dinner. Blunderer thinks he will have a fit of rage, but as there is nothing else to do he does as he is bidden. Suddenly there come from a cupboard knocks and cries. The guests look at each other in bewilderment, and then the mother opens the door, just in time for the lady friend to throw her arms round the would-be servant's neck, thus giving to the astonished people, who were already turning up their noses and ready to leave the room, the explanation of her presence in the house. Blunderer thinks he has had enough of this little game, and he explains his plight to two policemen. But the evidence of the family causes Blunderer to be marched off, whereas the man they suppose to be the real nephew is enjoying the situation to the full.

THE QUARRYMAN.—This film shows first a workman in his happy home; but this scene, full of freshness, is soon replaced by one of horror and misery, for the father is made hopelessly blind by an accident in the quarry. To this is added presently the feeling of the blind man that his wife is not true to him. In his state of utter despondency he thinks that the only way out of his wretchedness is to seek oblivion in death, and he asks his son to take him to the river. He has just thrown himself into the water, when his wife, made anxious by his long absence, runs after him and saves him. This providential incident makes her leave the downward path and atone for the past.

CHARLOTTE CORDAY.—This film conjures up a period of the French Revolution which is full of interest to the public. Charlotte Corday designs in the silence and solitude of an old Norman town to rid France of Marat, who symbolises for her the wrong side of the Revolution; perhaps also to avenge the Comte de Belzunce, who has just been arrested, and with whom she was very friendly, as we see at the beginning of the story. She starts, gentle and terrible at the same time, and arrives in Paris, where she finds out Marat's whereabouts. A violent discussion has just taken place at the house of the people's friend between Robespierre, Danton, and Marat. Left alone, Marat has a bath in order to subdue the fever which runs through his veins. Charlotte finds her way to him and kills him. She is arrested, and the last tableau represents the horrible scene of the guillotine and Charlotte ascending the steps with head erect and a firm step.

ELECTRIC HOTEL.—The hotel of the future is the Electric Hotel. You need only touch an electric button and immediately you have what you require. Do you want a brush up? You press the button and the brush comes by itself and performs its work. Do you want your hair to be done up, or your husband a shave? You are attended to in a tick. This system gives you comfort, hygiene, and discretion. If the distribution boards get out of order, however, there is a general confusion throughout the hotel, but one has always to pay the ransom of progress. All that we see in this film.

PADDY HAS BEEN EATING HORSEFLESH.—Paddy is very hungry, and it is a pleasure to see him eating the enormous horseflesh steak on the table before him. Gradually an unknown and irresistible strength comes to him. He gets up, cuts capers, goes downstairs in a hurry, and seeing in the street a heavy cart, he puts himself to and starts off. By and by he increases his speed, and, like a runaway horse, he upsets everything which stands in his way. At last he is stopped and taken to the hospital between two policemen. In the operating-room, where he has to undergo an operation, the surgeons take from him a little wooden horse. After this Paddy is very pleased, and he expresses his gratitude to the doctors.

THE DESTRUCTION OF HYDERABAD.—The public can always see pictures of cities and capitals secured in the ordinary way, but a State capital in ruins and at the same time densely populated presents a unique and most unusual spectacle. There has been nothing in the recent history of India to compare with this disaster. All the terrible destruction was caused by the development of an unusual storm in the Bay of Bengal, which brought many days' continuous rain to the State of Hyderabad. On the already-saturated soil 15in. of rain fell in thirty-six hours, or one-half the seasonal rainfall in a day and a half. This brought such an overwhelming flood into the river Musi that it seemed as if no limits to the danger zone could be imposed. The city of Hyderabad, with its half million of people, lies in a shallow basin, and for the low-lying parts there was no escape; the flood swept away whole quarters of the town and 40,000 inhabitants in a few hours, while the material loss was £15,000,000 sterling. The Assistant-Resident's house, the barracks, the Afzul Ganj hospital, and the Begum Bazar—the granary of the Deccan—shared the fate of the homes of the wealthy Hindu and Mahomedan bankers, lawyers, and jewellers, but it was upon the poorer section of the community that the blow fell with the greatest severity. The river, swollen into an enormous torrent, burst its banks, the stream rising over 60ft. and above the roadway on the bridges, which collapsed, all four going one after another.

IN the Urban picture secured the day after the calamity, the colossal Afzul Ganj bridge presents a most curious and interesting spectacle, the huge piers having been tossed about like matchwood, while a large island of silt rests in the centre of the river. Houses collapsed like packs of cards, and thousands of the inhabitants fled panic-stricken before the roaring avalanche. The chief Urban operator was quickly on the spot, and, by virtue of concessions readily granted by His Highness the Nizam, made the most of the exceptional opportunities, and from the source of the river Musi, twenty miles above the city, to the limit of the affected district, secured a series of pictures of grand photographic quality which form the only life-motion record of the great disaster. Scenes of watery desolation above Hyderabad are succeeded by striking panoramic views of the city itself, where whole districts, thickly inhabited, were wiped out in a few hours, rich and poor suffering equally in so far that the homes of all classes were swept away. The havoc wrought was terrible, and the pictures realistically convey, in a manner impossible by any other means, a clear and convincing idea of the calamity, and the steps immediately taken to combat the attendant evils In spite of the squalor and distress, picturesque scenes are plentiful throughout the series, those of the rebuilding operations calling for special notice. Strangely enough, the picture has no gruesome features, and by reason of its very unusualness presents aspects of native life which are seldom possible to secure. The Charles Urban Trading Co. are exceptionally fortunate in that their operator was practically on the spot. This fine film will be shown for the first time at the Palace Theatre on Monday evening.

CHRISTMAS, FROM THE BIRTH OF CHRIST TO THE TWENTIETH CENTURY.—This is a beautifully conceived and charmingly executed life-motion picture story of the Nativity, and its celebration in different countries at various epochs of the Christian era. Immense pains have been bestowed upon this new subject, and no expense has been spared to make a really living picture from the material at the company's command. Months of preparation, months more of actual work in arranging, photographing and colouring the scenes have been spent, and long journeys undertaken by the whole staff engaged to secure the accurate surroundings and congenial atmosphere of the various episodes depicted. The colouring of the whole subject is superb, pleasing, soft, effective, and artistic; the winter scenes, with the numerous harmonising contrasts, the flare of torches and braziers, the cloud, smoke and snow effects introduced being especially noteworthy. The interior scenes are no less excellent, the furniture, dress, and appointments of the periods and countries having been carefully copied. The setting of the picture is, in fact, as perfect as experience, skill, and means can produce, while the enactment of the various scenes has been entrusted to accomplished and experienced artists who—reverent where the nature of the subject demands, jubilant by reason of the season and the particular occasion depicted—have risen to the occasion and worked together in perfect harmony to produce one of the most remarkable and fascinating pictures that have been published since the introduction of the kinematograph; a picture which will especially appeal to every audience in every country which has even a rudimentary knowledge of what Christmas implies. In our next issue we shall give further particulars of this remarkable film.

The Gaumont Company.

A GREEK SLAVE is a dramatic effort from the same studio. It unfolds the story of a slave girl, who, forsaking a lover of her own station to marry her master, is poisoned by the former on her marriage morning. The story is well worked out, the various scenes giving the Gaumont stage managers an opportunity of striking effects which they utilise to the full. Those who used Gaumont's previous series, OUR INDIAN EMPIRE, will be glad to hear that its success has led the company to prepare a further film on the same subject, which is issued this week, and is fully up to the high standard set by the first in quality and interest. We understand that under the title SAVED FROM THE SEA, Gaumont's have in preparation a subject for which they anticipate as good a demand as for some of their most memorable bits of the past year. This film will be ready for publication shortly, and full details will be published in an early issue of this paper, or may be obtained from the company on application.

THE BRIDGE OF SIGHS.—"Far from the madding crowd" this dramatic film subject opens in a peaceful country home, wherein we see the devoted father and daughter interrupted by a stranger at the gate. Hospitality is extended to the stranger, during which the flatters the girl, much to the father's annoyance. The girl is, however, flattered, and, being infatuated, contrary to her father's wish she meets the stranger clandestinely. During one of these meetings she is persuaded by his vows of eternal constancy to elope to the town. Here she sees that "all is not gold that glitters," and is deserted. Alone in a great city, without food, without experience, friendless and helpless she seeks work. A homeless wanderer, she sees her lover and his new mistress, but all her appeals are roughly turned aside. Resting, weakened by starvation, bitter memories haunt her so that the rushing tide invites her to rest. Plunging in she is borne along by the river, and when, rough but sympathetic hands lift her from the water she is past all human help. The clergyman reverently crosses her hands as the cold moonlight streams through the windows of the morgue across her face, and as the moonlight fades the vision of Christ appears in an attitude of infinite pity and a look as of benediction.

EX-CONVICT No. 900.—Upon his release from prison, Convict No. 900, although handicapped by poverty, disgrace, and weakness, resolves to start life afresh and hastens to see his wife and child. Their happiness is his sole interest, and, obtaining a place as a shipping clerk, he does well until he receives his dismissal as a result of a visit from detectives. Hoping against hope, he fights bravely on. Whilst out one day seeking work to enable him to get medical aid for his sick child there is wild excitement in the street. Seeing a runaway team about to dash a child to death he risks his life to save the little thing, and amidst the confusion he disappears, a nameless hero. After a weary struggle he has to confess he is beaten, and, every man's hand seemingly against him, he chooses a likely house, gets his tools, and returns to the old life. Obtaining an entrance to a banker's residence he starts to pack the loot, of which there is plenty, when he is covered by the banker's revolver. Whilst the police are being summoned, the banker's child enters the room to look for her dolly and recognises Ex-Convict 900 as the man who saved her from the horses. The banker is amazed at the cordial greeting of the child and sends the police away. The ex-convict is then given a helping hand and all ends well.

ON GUARD AT THE POWDER-MAGAZINE.—Here we have tragedy and romance, and this is the story told. It was a beautiful sunny day; the Caroline lay loaded at the harbour, ready for sea, as the shipowner appeared with his wife and his daughter. He begged the young captain to take good care of his daughter and see her safely to her family in the foreign country, where she was going to spend some time. Everything seemed to come off well, the first half of the road was already passed, when one day a pirate craft was encountered. The crew were armed and everything made ready to meet the attack. The pirates boarded the merchantman and a wild fight followed on the deck, which was, however, soon finished, the pirates gaining the victory. The killed or wounded men were thrown on the deck and the young lady was taken to the cabin. The leader of the pirates had just passed the captain on his way to the cabin when there appeared aft a sailor-boy. During the fight he fell overboard with one of the pirates without getting hurt, and now he had climbed up the stern, determined to save the captain and the vessel or to die. He quickly released the captain, and both hurried downstairs and burst open the door to the captain's cabin. The pirate chief was fighting with the young lady, who was struggling hard to defend herself against him. The captain was just in time. He stretched the pirate to the ground with a blow and the sailor-boy killed him with the pirate's own knife. They then went to the powder-magazine, where Peter placed himself with a burning torch in his hand, while the captain went to the second in command, asking him to round the ship at once towards land if he did not wish himself and the crew to be blown up. In order to prove that he was in earnest the captain led the robbers to a hatchway, through which they could see Peter sitting with his torch at the powder-magazine. One glance was sufficient to show them that the case was serious. The vessel was immediately turned round and the course shaped for the shore, with the captain and the young lady at the helm. Near the shore the robbers were allowed to go on board their own vessel while the captain and Peter were keeping watch with loaded revolvers in their hands. One by one they left the ship. On his return home the captain obtained a beautiful bride.

A Boxing Film.

Two gentlemen representing the Chicago Film Exchange, and now staying at the Hotel Cecil, have brought to England the most perfect set of pictures ever taken of a boxing contest. Messrs. Lewis and Krone, the gentlemen in question, showed to a party of managers and others this film, representing the great contest that took place on Sept. 9 at Colma, California, between "Battling" Nelson and Joe Gans. Twenty-one rounds were fought in strenuous style, and the pictures depict every detail with a clearness and accuracy that are remarkable. They have been seen at Oscar Hammerstein's, where they commanded a salary of £200 a week. Many bookings were at once obtained for the films by Mr. Hugh J. Didcott.

"THE BLACK PIERROT."

Baron de Perignac .....Mr. C. H. Douglass
Master Sweep .....Mr. A. Terriss
Boy Sweep .....Master Henry
Innkeeper .....Mr. J. Buer
First Actor .....Mr. W. Yardley
Tragedian .....Mr. A. G. Uno
Comedian .....Mr. Edgar Cooke
Coachman .....Mr. J. Child
Actress .....Miss Bella Bashall
Fairy Queen .....Miss Lilian Kendall
Baroness de Perignac .....Miss M. Russell

In The Black Pierrot the versatile Mr. Austin Fryers has written a little fairy romance which has already found immense favour with his patrons, and especially with that section of them which may be classed as juvenile. The scene opens with a merry party of children dancing and singing an old English roundelay outside the Mermaid Inn. Presently there arrives a party of strolling players, and these, having no money, offer to entertain the landlord of the inn, provided he will give them food and accommodation. He agrees to do so, and thus we are treated to songs and dances and clowning. When they have quitted the open space in front of the hostelry, in order to partake of the hospitality of the innkeeper, a drunken sweep comes upon the scene, dragging along with him and beating his apprentice, a lad. The latter appeals for mercy, and an actress emerges from the inn, intervenes on his behalf, persuades his ruffianly master to leave him, brings him food, and cheers him by telling him a story of a good fairy who performs wonders for poor boys. The little sweep then goes to sleep on a stone bench. In the darkness the Fairy Queen and her followers surround him, and the night is made melodious by their sweet singing. With the breaking of dawn the boy awakes, to discover a magical transformation in his appearance. He is no longer the unhappy sweep in rags. The fairies have attired him in a beautiful dress—the dress of a prince. He can scarcely realise what has happened. And to fill his cup of happiness the Baron and Baroness de Perignac drive up in their coach and recognise him as the son who was stolen from them a few years previously. The abductor, of course, was the drunken sweep, who gets severely handled by the players. The playlet is, on the whole, well acted by the various members of the cast. The music is pretty and tuneful, the songs, "Sock and buskin" and "Sleep on," being particularly well rendered. The lighting effects, which present a difficulty in an arena, have been extremely well arranged.

The rest of the programme is characterised by variety and cleverness. Capital turns are furnished by Hengler's clowns and equestrian performers, and others contributing interesting items are Miss Florence Transfield in her fancy horsewomanship act; Daisy, the educated pony; Signorinetta, in a comical equestrian show; Milton and Spring, expert horizontal bar performers; Miss Iona Ginnett, equestrienne; Platter, comedy juggler; Master Sam Mark, a talented boy actor in Dickens impersonations; Spanghaletti's trained dogs and baboons; Aerian and Ostara, in a daring trapeze exhibition; Cooke and Shadow in a comic interlude; and Frank Stephenson, in a jockey act, the entertainment concluding with illustrated songs and animated pictures.

Miss Frances Letty, the chorus queen, achieved a great success at Ipswich this week, the audience singing her choruses with such gusto and enjoyment as to stamp these songs as positive pantomime winners. Miss Letty's business is now in the hands of the energetic Tom Claxton, who has secured engagements for her at a big figure well into 1911. Her songs, which are her sole property, are published by Francis, Day, and Hunter.

Mr. Charles Whittle's appearance at the Oxford on Monday was the signal for a most cordial reception. After the first chorus of "I don't care if there's a girl there" had been sung, there was never a doubt as to the phenomenal success of the number; it seemed to grip the packed house from the start, and there was no half-hearted success. Mr. Whittle has kindly consented to grant a few permissions for this great song to be sung at music hall. Apply to the Star Music Co.

Mr. and Mrs. Wilfrid Compton (Miss Miriam Holt) conclude a lengthy engagement with Mr. Arthur Jefferson's sketch on the Moss and Stoll tour at Nottingham next week. Mr. Compton has managed the sketch for Mr. Jefferson, and played the "dude" part with great success, Mrs. Compton being the young bride. They will probably return to the threatres for a while.

At the Aquarium, Scarborough, the principal artists in this week's bill are the Merrions, who are old favourites here; Robins and Collier, in The Lady and the Porter, give a delightful entertainment full of humour and new jokes; Clive and Vera are good, as also is Alman Corrize in a juggling scena. J. S. Walker is a comedian of merit; and the Rymros sing Welsh songs in finished style. Denby and Dent submit entertaining sketches in up-to-date style.

"THE CERT."

A Comedy Sketch, produced on Monday, Nov. 2, at the Queen's, Poplar.

Bob Havadash .....Mr. P. Waddock
Mr. Timothy Graball Mr. Arthur Charrington
Jack Ardupp Bodger .....Mr. A. B. Allen
Hilda Havadash .....Miss Edith Winbrook
Mrs. Anastatia Pepperton Miss Evelyn Shelley
Smuts .....Miss A. Lowrie

The prologue of The Cert, a tirade against the complaining and fault-finding wife, was familiar to most of those who patronised the Queen's, Poplar, on Monday. Afterwards came the sparkle into the production and, the harangue ended, the attention was soon arrested. The perplexed husband drew an envelope from his pocket. His rich uncle had doubled his allowance! Hysteria ran riot, and gesticulation was a relief. Pressing bank notes into his wife's hand he jostled her out to shop, and—to himself—he speculated wildly on the prospects of his increased fortune. Horse racing, his pet passion, appealed to him, and he ran down the list of runners with avidity. "Staked," "doubled," and "cummered" as mathematical problems solved themselves with remarkable quickness. His pile was made if he "clicked." He wrote out his slip and put it into his pocket, donned his hat, and rushed into—his ma-in-law. Argument clouded his memory; he forgot his errand to the bookmaker, and pacified her with kisses—a strange departure which captivated her and convulsed the audience. A boy cried a paper ouside, a shilling changed hands, and the first horse had won—his tenner was a hundred. An old friend with abject despair written on every line of his face sauntered into the room. Thirty pounds would free his finances—he had it, and a gold watch, diamond pin, and ring on top of it—generosity was wonderful. The servant pounced into the room, her salary was doubled, her leave extended. The second horse had won—the hundred had trebled. Mr. Graball, the landlord, made his appearance, accompanied with the intelligence that horse No. 3 had won; the arrears were paid, the purchase of the house negotiated. Wild confusion reigned. Excitement got the better of the backer's feelings. On the 'phone he ordered diamond rings by the dozen, cases of champagne, and a medley of goods and chattels enough to fill a dozen flats. The plumber made his appearance; he knew the latest betting news. The fourth horse had won! The lucky informant had a new rig out, to return a few minutes later inebriated. A newsboy cried the result of the next race—wonder upon wonders, he had won again; the modest tenner had reached a mild £6,300 by a method of mathematics rather difficult to explain. Round the room the frantic backer pranced, tearing down curtains, overturning chairs and tables—his pile was made. One by one in quick succession housemaids, hall porters, and handymen filed in laden with objects of furniture and articles of various kinds. The shopping wife had returned, the ma-in-law grew curious and demanded an explanation. She had it, and just as the excited company were giving vent to their natural jubilation, the wildly gesticulating backer fingered his pocket, and—oh, horror! the slip—he had forgotten it. His face was a study, the wife and ma-in-law looked glum, the audience rocked. They had been surprised, the drastic finale gave the point to the whole humour of the sketch, and they clapped with vigour, and the curtain dropped on The Cert. The production had won a singularly brilliant reception. The acting was very good, a close study of the characters presented being manifest. As the speculative backer Bob Havadash Mr. P. Waddock was the essence of vigour and comic earnestness; whilst in sober contrast to his activities and eccentricities the Timothy Graball of Mr. Arthur Charrington sounded exactly the right note of light gaiety, and possessed the necessary "point." The ma-in-law of Miss Evelyn Shelley and the Hilda Havadash of Miss Edith Winbrook were both exceedingly good. In securing the sketch at this hall for initial production the management, Messrs. F. and M. Abrahams, have achieved another success.

THE FRANK AYLMER CASE.

We append a letter from Mr. W. H. Wallis (of Tennyson and Wallis), who makes an appeal on behalf of Mr. Frank Aylmer (of the Two Sports). We are pleased to open the list, as Mr. Wallis desires.

"Olympia, Liverpool.
"Oct. 29, 1908.

"Dear Sir,—By publishing this letter you will assist an urgent and very deserving case. Frank Aylmer, of the Two Sports, is now lying for the fourteenth week in Mercer's Hospital, Dublin, having undergone two operations to his foot. It will be several weeks before he can be out and about again, and his wife, his only comfort, is in lodgings in Dublin with strangers, waiting till he is able to be out and working again. He was always a good boy whenever the hat went round for anybody else, and therefore if you will only open a list for him I am sure a lot of us together can do him a little bit of good. I enclose you P.O.O. for £5 9s., with names of donors. I shall be sending some more by Saturday.

"Thanking you in anticipation, yours faithfully,
"W. H. Wallis."

MASONS AT WORK.

Many years have passed since the consecration of the Lodge of Asaph, and all those who were privileged to be present on Monday last at the installation of the thirty-ninth Master were to be congratulated, inasmuch as they had gathered together to once again witness the admirable working of the Lodge and afterwards to betake of the sumptuous banquet which always marks the beginning of a new year and the incoming of a new Master. At 1.30 the members and their friends assembled at the Gaiety Restaurant, Strand, and at once proceeded to the business of the day. Mr. Herbert Chenery in a most impressive manner presided over the conclave, and was listened to with rapt attention whilst he performed with due observance of ceremonial law the ancient rite of installing his successor, Mr. Ernest Huntley Paterson. Throughout the delivery of the various addresses evidences of careful thought and earnest study were apparent, and Mr. Herbert Chenery may be congratulated upon the crowning act of his year of office, during which he has maintained and upheld the best traditions of the Lodge. Mr. Paterson appointed and invested his officers as follows: Messrs. Herbert Chenery (I.P.M.), A. B. Tapping (S.W.), Chris Hilton (J.W.), Chas. Cruikshanks (Treasurer), James W. Mathews (Secretary), Albert Le Fre (S.D.), Frank Lister (J.D.), W. Lestocq (D.C.), J. E. Hambleton (Organist), Antoine Clotens (Assistant Organist), Rev. W. P. Besley (Chaplain), E. Wesley Woolhouse (I.G.), Tom Clare (First S.), W. Edwyn Holloway (Second S.), Edward A. Pickering (Third S.), George H. Dyball (Fourth S.), and J. Gilbert (Tyler).

The customary charges were delivered by Mr. Chenery with fervency and spirit, and the impressive ceremony being concluded, the ordinary business was proceeded with, a noteworthy item being a proposition brought forward by Mr. Charles Cruikshanks:—"That the hearty congratulations of the members be offered to Mr. J. D. Beveridge, a Past Master of the Lodge, who has been elevated to the dignity and distinction of London Rank, and, as an appreciation of the respect shown to our worthy and esteemed brother, a record of the circumstance be entered on the minutes." The resolution having been seconded by Mr. James Weaver, was carried nem. con.

The labours of the day being ended, the members proceeded to the Banqueting Hall, where an elegant repast was supplied and done justice to.

The various toasts were received with enthusiasm, and accorded Masonic recognition. The Chairman, Mr. Paterson, was particularly happy in his various speeches, as the following brief extracts will show:—

"The King." "The quotation ('Was ever King so grieved for subjects' woe?' Henry I., Part 2) which appears under this toast seems to me to express those great qualities which are especially his Majesty's, and I cannot help but think it is partly because within his breast there beats a true Freemason's heart, and partly because he has so firmly implanted in his crown those two bright masonic jewels, 'Benevolence and Charity.'"

"Grand Officers." "You are perfectly well aware what the Grand Lodge is to us—it manages our central affairs—and to it and the Grand Officers we are all, as we ought to be, everlastingly grateful."

"The I.P.M." "His exposition of the ritual culminating with what you have heard this afternoon has been a treat to listen to. I am proud to see you, Mr. Chenery, as my immediate predecessor, and in presenting you with this handsome Past Master's jewel in recognition of your valuable and highly appreciated services to the Lodge."

"The Visitors." "The pleasantest toast of the evening. In the Lodge of Asaph we have not so many opportunities of seeing our brethren of other lodges as we could wish, and so it is perhaps because of that we, as a body, always look forward with pleasure to this toast at installation banquests. Among the visitors I see many old masonic friends—their presence here is the greatest satisfaction to us. Their worth is warrant for their presence, and once more, in the words of the Bard, 'From first to last a hearty welcome' to them all."

The toast of the "Worshipful Master" was given by Mr. Herbert Chenery, and having been duly honoured was responded to in fitting terms by Mr. Paterson.

The responses to the various toasts were extremely hearty, and in most instances to the point.

Grand Lodge was represented by Messrs. Thomas Fraser, P.G.Treas.; James Weaver, P.G.Std.B.; Henry Times, D.G.D.C.; Percy Fitzgerald, P.G.Std.B.; and Charles Cruikshanks, P.A.G.Std.B.; and the following members were also present:—Albert Alexandra, W. L. Barratt, R. P. Black, J. F. Carradous, N. Coviello, R. Douglas Cox, F. W. Crellin, J. J. Dallas, F. D. Daviss, Frank Desprez, John Geary, O. Grimaldi, James Groves, F. Hachenberger, Hale Hambleton, James C. Hambleton, G. Henderson, W. J. Holloway, R. F. Howgill, J. Stanford Hughes, Edward Humphrey, Nelson Jackson, Harry Lockett, W. Charlton Mann, George Mozart, C. H. Phillips, Chas. B. Powell, Louis de Reeder, H. B. Saunders, A. J. Shorter, G. W. Clement Smith, C. J. Taylor, Chas. E. Tinney, E. W. Whitmore, and Edmund Woolhouse.

Amongst the visitors were Messrs. N. R. Fulton, Ellis Wavell, A. H. Kendall, A. J. Cooper, J. H. Calcott, J. N. Strachan, Henry Ainley, H. B. Wooldridge, Stanley L. Powell, A. L. Weber, E. W. Hinchcliffe, E. F. Hustler Hinchcliffe, Paul M. Hasluck, Shad Frost, W. S. Lyon, Haswell Turner, J. Powell, W. Waterman, H. G. Danby, A. Ashton, W. J. Harvey, A. W. Morgan, A. G. Duck, Orton Bradley, G. Wigley, and R. P. Middlemast.

An excellent programme of music, &c., was provided by Mr. J. Edward Hambleton, to which contributions were given by Miss Winifred Lestocq (a sweet singer with a winning style), and Messrs. Gwilym Wigley, Orton Bradley, Arthur W. Payne, J. Edward Hambleton, Tom Clare, R. Perris, Ernest Cameron, and Capella, assisted by Messrs. George Mozart and Albert Le Fre, and Miss Le Hay (a talented daughter of John Le Hay).

A particularly happy inspiration was the presentation to the Master of the insignia of his rank in collar and apron with the customary adornments by the members of the Are You a Mason? company, of which Mr. Ernest H. Paterson is manager and principal comedian.

IN our last week's notice of the Hippodrome, Kirkcaldy, we omitted the name of Mr. Dan Fraser, comedian, who appeared with much success.

A MEETING of citizens is shortly to be held, with the object of organising a pageant at Bath, at the end of next June. The city lends itself admirably to such a scheme, being so rich in historical associations. The tableaux would probably commence with the time of King Bladud, and extend down to the zenith of the reign of Beau Nash.

THE secretary of the Music Hall Home, Mr. Benj. Woodger, desires to thank the following ladies and gentlemen:—Mr. E. Dottridge, of Oldham, for placing collecting boxes at his halls (per Mr. F. W. Millis); Mr. Leo Fritz, for placing box in his new offices; Mr. H. Cole, Empire Theatre, Liverpool, for box collection of £1 4s. 6d.; Mr. W. H. Boardman, Pavilion, Newcastle-on-Tyne, for collection of £1 13s. 6d.; Miss Melinda May, for parcel of playing cards for inmates; also the M.H.A.R.A., cheque for £50 to the fund. The next committee will be held at the Palace, Camberwell, on Thursday, Nov. 19, at 12 noon.

WORLD'S LARGEST SKATING-RINK.

On Thursday afternoon the Empress Theatre, Earl's Court, was opened to the public. The huge area has been entirely reconstructed and redecorated, and two separate maple "floors" have been laid down at a cost of £3,000. One will be used for skating, the other for dancing. Both amusements can be simultaneous.

A merry party of pretty actresses assisted the directors to "open the show." These included the Mesdames Madge Temple, Millie Payne, Lelia Moore, Lil Loraine, Ivy Williams, Tessie Hackney, Annie Braddan, and many more. Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Mozart were there, as were also Mr. and Mrs. Stuart Alexander, of Savoy fame, the Ginnett family, and the Bostocks.

Mr. Will Bennet, on behalf of the directors, asked the assembled company to drink success to "the world's greatest ballroom and skating area." He then called upon "Bobby," otherwise Mr. R. J. Aginton, known in every civilised capital as "the human top," to give a display of fancy skating. Mr. Aginton can, when put to it, do as many as 180 revolutions a minute on skates. This constitutes a world's record.

Mr. A. E. Court, the manager of the Empress Hall, told the writer that Aginton was "born skating" in New York City, and in the rinking world the opening of a new rink is not considered complete without an exhibition by him. Mr. Aginton has been present at the opening of skating rinks at Paris, London, Brighton, Birmingham, Leeds, Manchester, Chicago, Boston, Sydney, Melbourne, Brisbane, Katomba, and Buenos Ayres. He is the only man in the world who has ever succeeded in safely skating down the entire length of the water chute at Earl's Court.

During the afternoon and evening many novel displays were given. A mile handicap on skates was run, there was an obstacle race, and a hockey match was indulged in. 6,422 passed through the turnstiles.

Lit by fifty arc lamps and 3,000 small lights, visitors can view the dancing and skating (which takes place simultaneously) from an auditorium furnished with tip-up seats on the one side or from the Empress Club and smoking alcoves on the other. The tea-rooms and refreshment bars also afford good views of whatever may be in progress. Dancing will take place every evening at 7.30 in a specially enclosed oval area, around which skaters will, at the same time, incessantly glide. All taking part must remove their hats, and dancers must have proper dancing shoes. The programme will be changed daily, and each event will be depicted in huge letters on a bioscope screen at the top end of the hall.

Many novelties will be introduced by the management from time to time, embracing skating gymkhanas, the largest fancy dress balls and confetti carnivals ever held in London, sports on wheels, push ball, hockey, and polo. Novel competitions will be inaugurated. One of the first will be "Beauties on Skates," in which each lady will be required to let down her hair. The lady adjudged to have the finest head of hair will be presented with a pony and trap. The floor will cover an area of 22,000 square ft., and is unquestionably the finest in the world. For the convenience of patrons there will be three sessions daily: 11 to 1, 2.30 to 5.30, and 7.30 to 10.30. 8,000 pairs of skates by the best English firms have been stocked, among the chief being Richardson's cushion frame, anti-jar, ball-bearing skates—a splendid equipment for a skater. Those wishing to learn skating may use the Learners' Annexe, where the assistance of twenty skilled instructors will be at their service. The rink is thoroughly warmed and carefully ventilated, brilliantly lit and tastefully decorated.

AMUSEMENTS IN SOUTH AFRICA.

JOHANNESBURG, SEPT. 29.—STANDARD THEATRE (Lessee, Mr. Leonard Rayne; Manager, Mr. Grant Fallowes).—The Flag Lieutenant was staged at the above theatre this week, under the personal direction of Mr. Leonard Rayne, who has spared no expense in making the production of as high a standard as lies within the power of a producer in this country. Mr. Rayne's attempt has been crowned with success, full houses being the rule nightly. As Flag Lieutenant Lascelles Mr. Rayne gained yet another success, putting a large amount of vitality into the part; Mr. Chas. Howitt made an admirable Vice-Admiral Sir Berkley Wynne, K.C.B., speaking his lines in an able manner; as Major Thesiger Mr. Norman Partriege was excellent; a capital representation of the Admiral's secretary was given by Mr. G. Castle Morris; Colonel McLeod was in the capable hands of Mr. Clarence Bigge; the Sergeant Steel of Mr. Burton Seymour was a well-finished study; Miss Freda Godfrey undertook the rôle of Lady Hermione Wynne, and her dainty acting gained her endless applause; Miss Gertrude Godart as Mrs. Cameron was entirely at home in the part; Mrs. Gough Bogle and Violet Hood were well accounted for by Misses Annie Leaf and Naomi Rutherford.

HIS MAJESTY'S THEATRE (Lessees, B. and F. Wheeler, Ltd.; Manager, Mr. W. J. Woodward).—The above company staged The Girl Behind the Counter for the first time in Johannesburg on Thursday. As Winnie Willoughby Miss Elsa Partiss scored a decided success; Miss Chrissie Ralland was thoroughly at home as Susie, singing her numbers daintily; Miss Florence Vie was seen to advantage as Lady Willoughby, her conception of the part being very clever; first honours fall to Mr. Foster Courtenay as General Sir Wilkie Willoughby, his originality of method being agreeably marked; as Dudd Mr. Alf. Beers caused endless amusement; Mr. Arthur Cartwright played and looked the part of Charlie Chetwynd to a nicety, his fine voice doing justice to all the numbers that fell to him; Mr. H. E. Pearce gave a very humorous reading of Viscount Gushington; and Mr. Jack Morrison was good as Rudolph. All the minor parts were in capable hands, and the chorus and scenery left nothing to be desired.

MISS MAUD ASTON, who has been specially engaged to fill the place vacated by Miss Maudie Thornton, arrived in Johannesburg this week, to join the Wheeler-Edwardes Gaiety company as lead.

DURBAN, OCT. 3. — HIS MAJESTY'S THEATRE (Lessees, Empire Theatre Co., South Africa, Ltd.; Manager, Mr. A. C. Hyman).—The star turn here is furnished by the Kaufmann Troupe of cyclists, whose feats are astounding; May Aubrey has caught the public taste; Ambrose Thorn continues as popular as ever; Lyons and Caller, pot pourri entertainers, are good. Other turns here are Edith Burn, Caswell and Arnold, Hawa and Wyatt, and Estelle Stapley.

WOLFRAM'S Bioscope at the Town Hall is receiving a good reception.

THE Woods-Williamson company are at Port Elizabeth. Mr. Woods and Miss Williamson have gathered around themselves an exceptionally versatile company with a large répertoire. This week they are playing Jim the Penman.

MISS MAUD ALLAN is rapidly recovering from the effects of her accident, and it is hoped that she will be able to return to the Palace in about a fortnight.

MR. ERNIE MAYNE, who has been winning golden opinions on the Moss-Stoll tour, returns to town on Monday, playing four turns. He has been re-engaged by Mr. Stoll up to 1914. Christmas sees him for the first time in a London pantomime at the Borough Theatre, Stratford.

AMERICAN AMUSEMENTS.

NEW YORK, OCT. 28.—Mr. William Collier has a new play called The Patriot, which he will presently bring to New York. It was written by himself in collaboration with Mr. J. Hartley Manners. The scenes of the first and third acts are laid at Bull Frog, Nevada, while the second act takes place in a fashionable part of London. The central figure, portrayed by Mr. Collier, is an up-to-date young mining engineer of English birth, and the story deals with the incidents attending the progress of a young Englishman who finds himself for the first time in a Western American mining country.

MISS ADELINE GENEE, after fulfilling a very successful engagement at the Grand Opera House in this city, journeyed to Boston, where her dancing in The Soul Kiss is now delighting large audiences at the Colonial Theatre. According to the newspapers, a bronze-painted plaster statue of Miss Genée was erected by her Press agent on Boston Common, where it attracted a big crowd. It was afterwards removed to the lobby of the Colonial Theatre. As a clever advertising scheme, the work of this particular Press agent is considered to be "the limit."

"WHAT EVERY WOMAN KNOWS," a new play, by J. M. Barrie, with Miss Maude Adams in the leading rôle, was performed for the first time in America at the Apollo Theatre, Atlantic City, on the 18th inst., before a crowded house. The newspaper reports indicate that the play will be a success. Miss Adams will begin her New York engagement in January.

MRS. GEORGE C. HOWARD, formerly Caroline E. Fox, a well-known actress some years ago, died at Cambridge, Mass., on the 15th inst. She was born in 1829, and was one of the original members of the famous Boston Museum Company. Her second husband was the first to produce the accepted version of Uncle Tom's Cabin, and Mrs. Howard appeared in the original cast as Topsy on the opening night, Sept. 27, 1852.

MR. GEORGE M. COHAN, whose unique stage offerings have been aptly characterised as "Cohanesque," is to retire from the stage for a year and travel. His sister Josephine will shortly "star" in a new musical play called The Christmas Doll.

"THE SERVANT IN THE HOUSE," by Charles Rann Kennedy, is being played once more at the Savoy Theatre, where it has already enjoyed a long run. In the meantime the company has toured the larger cities of the West with uniform success. Mr. Edmund R. Kennedy, brother of the author, now appears as the Vicar, succeeding Mr. Charles Dalton in that rôle. Miss Edith Wynne Matthison, Miss Mabel Moore, Mr. Tyrone Power, Mr. Walter Hampden, and Mr. Arthur Lewis repeat the success they made when the piece was first produced here. This remarkable play caused no little discussion during its previous engagement, and its return has been welcome by large audiences.

MR. CHARLES KLEIN has written a drama of everyday life in New York, called The Third Degree, in which an attempted robbery and the conduct of the police in the case figure conspicuously. Mr. Edmund Breese and Mr. Ralph Delmore will play prominent parts.

MR. DE WOLF HOPPER recently fell to the stage whilst swinging by a wire in the new musical play, What Happened Then, in which he appeared as the Pied Piper of Hamelin, and sustained such injuries as compelled him to close his season and rest for a few weeks.

MISS BILLIE BURKE, in Love Watches, continues to delight large audiences at the Lyceum Theatre. Miss Gertie Millar and the captivating Girls of Gottenberg have established themselves as popular favourites at the Knickerbocker. Jack Straw, with Mr. John Drew, is in the seventh week of its success at the Empire, and The Mollusc, with Miss Alexandra Carlisle and Mr. Joseph Coyne, is still going strong at the Garrick.

HARRY LAUDER is in the third and last week of his engagement at the Lincoln-square Theatre, which has been crowded to the doors at every performance. Lauder's songs have aroused the greatest enthusiasm, and if he didn't "put his foot down" in his own characteristic way he would have to exhaust both himself and his répertoire to satisfy all demands. Not until he has sung "Rocked in the cradle of the deep" does the storm subside.

CLARICE MAYNE made her American début at Percy Williams's Colonial Theatre last week, and made an immediate hit. She sang several good songs and gave some excellent imitations of Marie Lloyd, Vesta Victoria, Vesta Tilley, and other English artists.

AMELIA BINGHAM made her first appearance in vaudeville at the American Theatre last week, and scored a decided success in Big Moments from Great Plays. Assisted by competent players, Miss Bingham enacts striking scenes from Mlle. Marni, Mme. Sans-Gêne, A Modern Godiva, and A School for Husbands. Only one stage setting is used, the costumes of the players being changed to fit the various parts. The act is excellent in every detail, and is warmly applauded.

BLAKE AND GRANBY are sailing to-day for South Africa, under engagement made by Mr. Tom Pacey with Mr. S. M. Hyman.

THE latest quotations for music hall shares are as follows:—Alhambra, 1 5-16; Canterbury, ¼; Empire (15s. paid) 1¼, ditto (10s. paid) 1; London Pavilion Ord. 3⅜, ditto pref. 4¼; Metropolitan, 14s.; Moss' Empire 5⅛, ditto 5 per cent. pref. 3⅝; Oxford, 5⅛; Palace, 18s.; Tivoli, 5⅜; Variety Consolidated Theatres, 10s.

JEAN MACDUFF, the well-known lady Scotch comedian, is this week appearing with her usual success at the Palace, Aberdeen, where she is featuring two of her latest successes, one a military kilty song, entitled "Dandy Sandy," and another in full male Highland costume, entitled "I'm getting married in the morning," in which song she introduces a pretty girl neatly dressed in white, with tartan hat and plaid.

THE following letter has been sent to Mr. C. Douglas Stuart, general secretary of the M.H.A.R.A., by Mr. Albert Voyce:—"Dear Mr. Stuart,—Now that I have practically concluded my term of office as chairman of the M.H.A.R.A. Executive Committee, I feel that it is necessary that I should publicly acknowledge your constant courtesy and attention not only to myself but to every detail of business connected with my office. Thanks in a great measure to yourself, the position has been both easy and pleasurable. Accept from me every good wish for your future prosperity, and the sincere hope that you may long be spared to occupy the position of general secretary to the Music Hall Artists' Railway Association.—Yours as ever, ALBERT VOYCE."

ON behalf of the committee of the Music Hall Ladies' Guild, 61, New Oxford-street, W.C., Miss Melinda May (secretary) wishes to thank the following ladies and gentlemen for gifts: Miss Aitken, Misses Walker and May, Mme. Haydee, Mrs. Ernest Collins (for parcels of useful clothing), M.H.A.R.A. (for generous donation of £50), Mrs. Herbert Shelley (for baby's woollen jacket), Mr. Leopold Rothschild (for letter towards helping a poor sufferer into a home for consumptives), and the Rev. Arthur Brinckman (for a valuable work, entitled "Register and Digest"). Miss May would be grateful for gentlemen's as well as ladies' wearing apparel. Friends of the charity are heartily invited every Wednesday from three to five o'clock.

MUSIC HALL ARTISTS WANTED.

PALACE THEATRE, GRIMSBY.

To all whom it may concern.

WANTED, Known.—There is an idea throughout the Variety Profession that, since the closing of the Tivoli Theatre, Grimsby, Mr. J. H. Curry has become interested in the management of the Palace. We wish it to be distinctly understood that Mr. Curry does not represent the management of the Palace Theatre in any capacity whatever, neither is he a director nor a shareholder. On the closing of the Tivoli, Mr. Curry asked if we would take over the Artists booked for the Tivoli, and we promised to do so whenever it was possible. We are, however, in no way bound to do so. The arrangement was quite an unofficial one, suggested by Mr. Curry with the sole object of avoiding, if possible, any Artist being thrown out through the unavoidable closing of the theatre under his management.

Signed,
THE GRIMSBY PALACE THEATRE AND BUFFET, LTD.,
F. VERNON WALFORD,

RE APPLICATIONS FOR ENGAGEMENTS

All applications by either Artists or their Agents must be made to the Head Office.

Lowest terms must be stated, and distinction made between salaries required for larger and smaller towns.

Vacant dates should be stated. If a list of existing bookings be sent, it will render selection easier.

Artists employing Agents should accredit one only at one time, as the friction arising when several Agents are employed at the same time, all expecting the one booking to go through each of them, often renders it expedient to avoid that booking altogether rather than give undeserved offence to several Agents.

New Acts seeking Engagements, or turns not rebooked (possibly because they have played a series of dates without introducing new business), will facilitate matters by having their acts seen by our District Managers. Their Districts and Postal Addresses are as follow:

EDINBURGH, GLASGOW, NEWCASTLE, AND DISTRICT.
MR. S. GETHING,
Empire Theatre, Glasgow.

LEEDS, SHEFFIELD, HULL, BRADFORD, AND DISTRICT.
MR. T. GERALD MORTON,
Empire Palace, Leeds.

BIRMINGHAM, NOTTINGHAM, LEICESTER, AND DISTRICT.
MR. HATTON WHARTON,

MR. ALBERT MITCHELL,

MR. J. CHRISTIE,

N.B.—Mr. OSWALD STOLL or Mr. FRANK ALLEN can be seen by appointment on all matters arising out of the above, and for the discussion of entirely new Numbers.

All Artists or Agents who communicate with our District Representatives must have made definite applications, in accordance with above directions, to the Head Office, at the same time, or just previously.

THIS WEEK'S NOVELTIES.

CHARLOTTE CORDAY.

Code Word, "FANTOME."

This film conjures up a period of the French Revolution. Charlotte Corday has planned to rid France of Marat, one of the leaders of the Revolution, because he represents in her mind the party responsible for so many useless crimes, and especially that of arresting the Comte de Belzance, a friend of hers. She leaves her little town in Normandy, and inquires as to Marat's whereabouts as soon as she is in Paris. At last she finds her way to him, and kills him in his bath. She is arrested, and the last picture represents the horrible scene of the guillotine, and Charlotte ascending the steps with head erect and a firm step.

THE SUBSTITUTE.

Code Word, "FIERTE."

Young Blunderer is a merry student who does not want to get married yet in spite of a letter just received from a wealthy aunt who practically commands him to marry a girl of her own choice whom she is sending him from the country, accompanied by her father and mother. Blunderer, who is just having a lady friend to dinner, makes his servant receive the uninvited guests in his stead, and has the lady friend locked up in a cupboard. While Jack is making love to the country girl at the same time as enjoying the dinner served by his master, loud knocks are heard at the door. It is the lady friend who wants to step out of the cupboard, and Mr. and Mrs. Pleasant look bewildered. They breathe more freely, however, on seeing the pretty lady throw her arms round the would-be servant's neck. But when Blunderer calls in a policeman to punish his impudent servant, it is Blunderer himself who is marched off on the evidence of the Pleasant family.

528ft. The Subject, £8 16s. 0d.

A VENDEAN

Code Word, "FAISCEAU."

The Vendean fisherman is going out to sea, and his pretty daughter is seeing him off. On her way home a young swell offers her a seat in his carriage. She is only sixteen, and very simple, and during the drive she promises to meet him again. As she is coming back from her appointment with the young man, her father arrives, and learning the truth, he puts into his hands a dangerous weapon and forces him to fight with him. The boy's mother, having been warned by the broken-hearted girl, separates the duellists and gives her consent to her son marrying the fisherman's daughter.

560ft. The Subject, £9 6s. 8d. Toning £1.

THE SCAR.

Code Word, "FAMEUX."

Two noblemen are in love with Lady Ghislaine; but as she shows plainly to one of them that she does not care for him, he makes love to her sister. One fine evening, however, Lady Ghislaine is assaulted by masked men, and in her struggle she bites the hand which clasps her until it bleeds. Then she runs away. A few days later, the rejected suitor proposes for the hand of Miss Molly, which is granted to him. As the fiancé is going to sign the deed before the marriage, Lady Ghislaine notices on his hand the scar left by her teeth, and the villain is killed in a duel he has to fight with Lady Ghislaine's fiancé.

Code Word, "FIBRINE."

ELECTRIC HOTEL.

Code Word, "FIORITURE."

The hotel of the future is the Electric Hotel. You need only touch an electric button, and immediately you have what you require. Do you want a brush up? You press a button and the brush comes by itself and performs its work. Do you want your hair to be done up, or your husband a shave? You are attended to in a tick. Should the distribution board get out of order, however, then you would have to pay the ransom of progress, as is shown in this film.

495ft. The Subject, £8 5s. 0d.

PADDY HAS BEEN EATING HORSE-FLESH.

Code Word, "EXPLOSIF."

Paddy is very hungry, and it is a pleasure to see him eating the enormous horseflesh steak on the table before him. Gradually an unknown and irresistible strength comes to him. He gets up, cuts capers, hurries downstairs, puts himself to a heavy cart, and starts. By-and-by he increases his speed, and like a runaway horse he upsets everything standing in his way. At last he is stopped, and taken to the hospital between two policemen. He has to undergo an operation, and the surgeons take from him a little wooden horse. After this Paddy is quite happy, and he expresses his gratitude to the doctors.

Code Word, "FENAISON."

Code Word, "FILLEUL."

This film shows a workman in his happy home; but when he meets with an accident in the quarry, and he is made hopelessly blind, the scene changes to one of horror and misery. To this is added presently the feeling for the blind man that his wife is not true to him, and asking his son to take him to the river, he throws himself into the water. His wife, made anxious by his long absence, runs to the river and arrives in time to save him. This providential incident makes her leave the downward path and atone for the past.

577ft. The Subject, £9 12s. 4d. Toning, £1.

Code Word, "FINANCE."

Titles of pictures: The birdnesters meet, make their arrangements, and go to the mountain. A good post is fixed. A nest is discovered. The nest. Feeding the bird. A daring birdnester lets himself down into an abyss. Poor mother driven from the nest and her young taken prisoner. A wounded gazelle devoured by birds of prey. Result of the gun-shots. A pretty tableau of the hunt.

595ft. The Subject, £9 18s. 4d. Toning, £1.

Code Word, "FIOLE."

Messrs. H. Kéroul and A. Barré, the talented farcical playwrights, and applauded authors of "Billet de Logement," "La Nuit de Noces," &c., give us with "The French Cupboard" their first cinematograph play. Mr. Lover has stepped into a French cupboard in order to escape the notice of the furniture dealer, whose wife has been flirting with him; unfortunately the cupboard has to be delivered at once to the address of people in all the topsy-turviness of a removal. Through a chink in his cupboard he sees the table being laid in Mr. and Mrs. Exo's room, and during the latter's absence he helps himself to the good things spread on the table. There ensues a quarrel between the husband and wife when they see that their things have disappeared. After a series of other laughable incidents peace is once more restored, and Mr. Lover, leaving his hiding-place, explains the theft. Such is the plot of this play, so frankly amusing and droll, acted with wit and cheerfulness by the exhilarating Prince, of the Variety Theatre, F. Frey, of the Ambassadeurs, Dutard of the Olympia, and Mme. Delza, of the Vaudeville Theatre.

LAST WEEK'S NOVELTIES.

A DRUNKARD'S DREAM.

Code Word, "FAUCHEUR."

A man having drunk more than was good for him, has a dream, in which he sees all sorts of weird flowers and lovely women. The latter, clad in variegated dresses, perform clever dances and ballets. When the gentleman wakes up he is not in the sweetest of tempers; no doubt he would have liked to stay in his enchanted dreamland.

412ft. The Subject, £6 17s. 4d. Colouring £4 5s. 0d.

A LIVING REFLECTION.

Code Word, "FABRIQUE."

A scientist has discovered in his dreams a means of mystifying people. He puts on a looking-glass a special stuff which makes every object appear double, and in the case of a person the shadow takes exactly the same attitudes and makes the same movements as the original. His new invention enables him to scare his servant to start a disturbance at a restaurant, and to save himself from a hooligan. Yet his numerous victims find him out at last, and they are going to make him pay for his jokes, when he suddenly wakes up.

510ft. The Subject, £8 10s. 0d. Toning, 6s. 0d.

THE VAMPIRES OF THE COAST.

Code Word, "FERME."

Everybody knows that in the days gone by it was the custom along the coast for the wreckers to lure the ships on to the cliffs during the storm in order to appropriate the spoil. Here is depicted one of those savage deeds, which too often took place in Brittany just on that bit of land where the waves of the Channel beat against those of the Atlantic Ocean, thus forming a very dangerous spot for the ships to venture on. During the storm the wreckers used to attract the vessels by means of a lantern tied to the horns of a limping cow, which was taken by the people on board for another ship. It is that now obsolete custom which has been revived for the cinematograph, and the film ends, after showing a picture of the revelry of the wreckers, with the rescue of a young and noble lady by a young peasant, and the marriage of the rescuer with the rescued.

577ft. The Subject, £9 12s. 4d. Colouring and Toning, £2 0s. 0d.

IN ZAMBESI.

Code Word, "FIACRE."

Here is shown a series of magnificent sceneries and landscapes of South Africa, with rapids and waterfalls, whose large volume of water tumbles down in heavy masses, forming sprays of white foam descending from the top of the rocks like a deluge, and seemingly disappearing at the bottom in a whirl of water of snow-white appearance.

314ft. The Subject, £5 4s. 8d. Toning, 15s. 0d.

THE DESTRUCTION OF HYDERABAD.

A VERITABLE TORRENT OF DEATH. OVER 40,000 NATIVES DROWNED. LOSS OF PROPERTY, £15,000,000 STERLING.
THE CAPITAL OVERWHELMED BY WATERS OF THE RIVER MUSI ON SEPT. 28, 1908.
SCENES UNPARALLELED SINCE THE JOHNSTOWN DISASTER.

"An Historic Picture."

The public can always see pictures of cities and capitals secured in the ordinary way, but a still densely populated capital city of half a million inhabitants in ruins presents a unique and most unusual spectacle.

SCENES INTRODUCED:

1. Mountain Source of the River Musi—a boulder-strewn stream.
2. Upper Reaches of the Musi before the flood.
3. The Musi gaining strength and force after the torrential rains.
4. The River in Flood—a foaming, irresistible torrent.
5. A Scene of Watery Desolation above Hyderabad.
6. Panoramic Views of the Ruined City, the result of a few hours of flood, during which the waters rose sixty feet and swept away four bridges, hospitals, palaces, houses and places of business of wealthy Hindus and Mahomedans, the Begum Bazaar, Granary of the Deccan. Whole districts of houses and huts which clustered thickly upon the banks of the Musi are so completely destroyed that only a vast expanse of mud and débris remains. A district of a mile and a half in length and half a mile in breadth entirely wiped out.
7. Stricken Survivors viewing ruined homes.
8. Homeless, hopeless, helpless native woman and child.
9. Havoc wrought in a few hours—Assistant-Resident's house, hospital, barracks in ruins.
10. Shelters and Hospital Tents hastily erected.
12. Search for Victims and Buried Treasure. Scenes of excavation. Elephants assist in the operations.
13. Removing the Bodies of Victims. Mournful spectacle of waiting vehicles.
14. Street Scenes in the higher part of the city. Refugees aimlessly wandering.
15. Soup Kitchens, and Victims awaiting Food. Crowds picturesque in spite of squalor and distress.
16. Rebuilding Operations. Men, women, and children constructing an embankment. Curious methods of labour—earth carried in wooden vessels on the head and emptied on the fast-growing embankment. Scene of great animation.

THIS GREAT PICTURE OF HYDERABAD WILL BE PUBLISHED ON MONDAY, NOV. 9, and sold on condition that it be not exhibited within a two-miles radius of the Palace Theatre, London, where it will from that date be included in the Urbanora Programme.

ANNOUNCE

THE TRAGEDY OF

RICHARD THE THIRD.

Edited by HORACE HOWARD FURNESS, Jr.

NEW VARIORUM EDITION

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE.

Those interested in the study of Shakespeare's plays will recall that a few years ago Horace Howard Furness, jun., prepared a revision of his father's Variorum Edition of "Macbeth," which was most favourably received by Shakespearean critics. It manifests ability and scholarship, and demonstrates the wisdom of Dr. Furness in associating his son with this invaluable work.

In the present volume the editor has used as a basis the text of the first folio edition of 1623, incorporating the additions of the quartos, and recording omissions and transpositions in the textual notes, together with a commentary containing criticisms from the days of Pope to the present day.

The Appendix contains the Stage History of the play; discusses the Text, the Date of Composition, and the Source of Plot; with criticisms by English and German authors too voluminous to be included in the Commentary.

HENRY IRVING SHAKESPEARE.

A NEW AND CHEAP EDITION OFFERED TO "THE ERA" READERS ON SPECIALLY ADVANTAGEOUS TERMS.

THERE can be little doubt that the whole profession should have this Edition of the great dramatist's works, arranged as it has been by the greatest Shakespearean actor of modern times, in conjunction with Mr. Frank A. Marshall; with extensive Notes and Introductions by Joseph Knight, O. F. Adams, H. A. Evans, P. L. Round, Dr. Richard Garnett, A. Symons, W. J. Rolfe, A. Wilson Verity, Canon Beeching, P. A. Daniel, and Prof. Edward Dowden.

The Edition has many features to recommend it, which here can merely be touched upon: "Shakespeare as a Playwright" by Sir H. Irving, "An Appreciation of Sir Henry Irving" from the pen of Bram Stoker, "Shakespeare's Country" contributed by Jerome Harrison, being, perhaps, the most important. Whilst the text is given unmutilated, un-Bowdlerized, Sir Henry has specially marked those portions which can, in his judgment, best be omitted in dramatic presentation.

The books have been specially illustrated by celebrated artists and each has a coloured frontispiece.

Send 6/- to-day, and complete edition in 14 volumes will be despatched, carriage paid; nine monthly payments of a similar sum and one payment of 3/- will complete the purchase.

Brinn's marvellous turn is rapturously applauded; the Motramos appear in an exceedingly bright and attractive drawing-room sketch Do You Reverse? Eadie and Ramsden are highly successful with their comedietta Charlie's Visit; Mr. Bert Danson shows much vivacity as a comedian; Lieut. Travers is as successful as ever in his ventriloquial act; and among the other members of a capital all-round company are Mr. Godfrey James, a fine vocalist, known as the "Singing Collier"; Beaty and Blanche, dainty duettists and dancers; Mr. Louis Kerno, a lively coon impersonator; and Miss Marie Neilson, a graceful dancer.

Walker, a very good coon comedian and dancer; the Handleys, a pair of entertaining comedians; Mr. Alexander Smith, a first-rate baritone vocalist, who also acts as soloist to the illustrated songs; and the Real Mackays, two of the smartest juvenile dancers and singers now appearing on the stage. The cinematograph display is admirable.

Montague.—The attractive programme is sustained by Scotch Kriss, a clever and versatile comedian; Miss Marie Rose, a fine singer and dancer; Mr. Archie Murray, an entertaining coon comedian; Mr. Arthur Bright, a superior vocalist and instrumentalist; and Mr. James Montague, an exceedingly resourceful entertainer. Bristling as this farce does with cleverly conceived humorous situations, there is an almost continual roar of laughter, caused by the funny sayings and doings of those entrusted with the interpretation. Mr. Henry J. Ford is an actor of considerable resource, and his conception of the baronet, Sir Guy, is simply "side-splitting"; Mr. Cecil Clayton's Hon. Charles Widdicombe is helpful as an additional element of humour; Mr. Wm. Lockhart is excellent as the jovial Dean Pottlebury; Mr. Vernon Sansbury, as the Jewish Isaac, with an eye to "bishness," is clever; and Mr. Geo. Rowlands is good as Sir Brian; whilst Messrs. Martin's clear and distinct delivery greatly assists the audience in comprehending the explanations of Abbé Fara; De Morcef found in Mr. John Howden an excellent representative; Mr. Conrad Heywood conscientiously devoted himself to the portrayal of M. Scotter; the Merrions (Will, Harry, and Fred) appeal with good effect; Tom Morris is an expert whistler; and A Fisherman's Daughter is the subject of the Bioscope.

Bandmaan acts Almida with rare histrionic talent; Mr. Bernard Elliott made Thariogalus the Tetrarch appropriately detestable; Mr. Chal. T. Chaloner was particularly amusing as Belos; and Mr. Douglas Earle powerfully portrayed Agazif. Miss Ruth Trafford as Edessa played cleverly. Miss Hughes plays Mrs. Baxter, the titular rôle, with a fine sense of its humour, and quite captivates the audience, besides amusing it. Mr. Athol Stewart as Tom Kemp is both breezy and tender as the part requires, impressing the "house" very pleasantly; Mr. Alic Chumley adapts himself well and ably to the part of Baxter; and Miss Lillias Waldegrave makes the rôle of Miss Roberts one of much beauty and distinction. A Bit of Old Chelsea puts the audience into the best of good humours at the beginning, and for this Mr. Alic Chumley, Mr. C. WHAT ARE MILLIONS TO THE MAN WHO IS ILL

Only a bitter mockery. The world is full of delights in which he cannot share. He can buy them but not enjoy them, and is poor despite his millions. This is specially true of the dyspeptic—the man who cannot digest his food. When the stomach ceases to effectually perform its natural work, food ceases to nourish and causes pain, heartburn, wind, acidity, and a host of other troubles which spoil life. Perfect digestion is the foundation of sound health, and that is assured by the use of the world- renowned digestive tonic and stomachic remedy, Mother Seig el's Syrup.

Mrs. S. A. Carter, of Welbeck Street, Castleford, Yorks, writes on April 13th, 1908: "I lost much time and money upon medicines which quite failed to cure me of indigestion before Mother Seigel's Syrup was recommended to me. But soon after I began to take that remedy a new world opened to me. I could again breathe freely, my appetite returned, and so did my old strength and energy."

Mother Seigel's Syrup is now also prepared in Tablet Form as Mother Seigel's Syrup Tablets. Price 2s. 9d.

THE YOUNGER KEMBLE.

On the morning of Nov. 12, 1854, expired, at his residence in Saville Row, Charles Kemble, the last survivor of a triad of artists, whose names are written indelibly in the annals of dramatic art.

The life of an actor, so far as it is an object of public interest, closes with his scenic farewell, wrote the late Mr. William Bodham Donne. The decease of an actor, and especially of one long withdrawn from the stage, might therefore attract little notice at any time beyond the circle of his immediate friends, and at the present moment of anxious anticipation is more than ordinarily liable to pass from the register of the living with merely a brief expression of regret. Johnson indeed declared that the death of Garrick eclipsed the gaiety of a nation. But this was a friendly hyperbole: the nation laughed or wept as before, although the mighty master no longer touched the chords of its emotions. The actor's task is fulfilled when the curtain descends upon his last impersonation.

The youngest by nearly twenty years of a family who for almost three generations formed the central group of all that was excellent on the stage, Charles Kemble was indebted for his eventual position as much to the discipline he underwent as to the dramatic powers which he shared or inherited. Nature had been bountiful to him in its gifts; his form was noble, his features classical and expressive, his voice, although not strong, remarkably melodious. But it was the diligent cultivation of these gifts which finally earned and secured for him his later and mature fame. His brother—who from the difference of their years stood to him also in loco parentis—knew well that there is no royal road to histrionic excellence. Hence he imposed upon the young débutant a probation as strict and regular as he was in the habit of prescribing to the least gifted of his associates. Charles Kemble was for some years an actor of third and fourth-rate parts, both in public and professional estimation, and for many more was entrusted with only secondary characters.

Throughout his career, Charles Kemble reflected the influences of his early discipline. He was, in the first place, a veracious actor, neither adding to nor falling short of the conceptions of his author. He was, moreover, a most industrious and painstaking actor, thinking nothing done while aught remained to do; inspired with a high ideal, assiduously striving to reach it, and probably in his own conception—for such are the feelings of every genuine artist—never wholly attaining it. Unlike Macready, he loved his vocation with all his mind and with all his strength.

His career as an actor began in one generation and terminated in another. It commenced at Sheffield in 1792, and closed at Covent Garden Theatre in 1840. The earlier impersonations of an actor who rises gradually in his profession are rarely remarked at the time or remembered afterwards. We have, however, Mr. Boaden's testimony to the "poetry of Charles Kemble's acting" in Guiderius, and his princely demeanour in Malcolm. But it was as the representative of second parts that his powers were first manifested. Those who are old enough to remember the Hamlet, Macbeth, and Coriolanus of his majectic brother; or the Lady Macbeth, Volumnia, and Mrs. Beverley of his matchless sister, will also recall the younger Kemble's chivalrous energy in Macduff, the classical grace of his Aufidius, and the pathos he ingrafted upon Lewson. We do not select these characters as among his best, but merely as illustrations of his powers as an auxiliary to the mature artists of his youthful days. In secondary parts he was indeed at all times unsurpassed, and he continued to perform them long after he occupied the foremost station in the ranks of scenic artists. How full of winning grace and good humour was his Bassanio, how humorous and true his drunken scene in Cassio, how fraught with noble shame after Othello's dismissal of his "officer"! He was the only Laertes whom it was endurable to see in collision with Hamlet, the only Cromwell worthy of the tears and favour of Wolsey.

We have great pleasure in calling in the evidence of an excellent judge of acting to support our own recollections of Charles Kemble.

"I never," (says Mr. Robson, in his Old Playgoer), "saw an actor with more buoyancy of spirit than Charles Kemble; Lewis had wonderful vivacity, airiness, and sparkle, but he was finicking compared with Charles. Who ever played a drunken gentleman as he did? His efforts to pick up his hat in Charles Oakley were the most laughable, the most ridiculous, the most natural that can be imagined. I have seen him perform the character of Friar Tuck, in a dramatic version of Mr. Peacock's Maid Marian, with such an extraordinary abandonment and gusto that you were forced back to the 'jolly greenwood and the forest bramble.'"

But the continued labour, the earnest study, and unwearied self-examination pursued for many years were rewarded by greater achievements than these.

The names of Faulconbridge and Marc Antony instantly evoke the person, the tones, and the looks of Charles Kemble. In the one we had before us the express image of the mediæval warrior, in the other that of the Roman triumvir. His Faulconbridge bore us back to Runnymede and the group of barons bold who wrested the great charter from the craven John. His Marc Antony transported us to the Forum and the Capitol.

If he had no equal in Benedick, neither had he in Jaffier; if his Leon and Don Felix were unsurpassed, so also were his Edgar in Lear and his Leonatus in Cymbeline. He was the most joyous and courteous of Archers, Charles Surfaces, and Rangers. His Jack Absolute was the most gallant of Guardsmen: his Colonel Feignwell a combination of the best high and the best low comedy, as he successively passed through his various assumptions of the Fop, the Antiquary, the Stock-broker, and the Quaker. In young Mirabel again he united the highest comic and tragic powers. In the first four acts he revelled in youth, high spirit, and lusty bachelorhood: in the last his scene with the bravoes and the "Red Burgandy" was for its depth of passion equalled alone by Kean's agony and death in Overreach. His Shylock has been commended by no incompetent judge for "its parental tenderness"; but the infusion of tenderness into Shylock's nature we conceive to have been an error. Shylock may have been attached to Jessica as a wolf to its cub; but if he loved her at all, he loved gold and revenge more; and Shakespeare has, in our opinion, afforded no hint of this palliating virtue in his Jew. On the contrary, in her presence Shylock's language to Jessica is harsh and peremptory; and after she has forsaken him, his lamentations are rather for his ducats and Leah's ring than for his daughter. Again, Mr. Kemble's Moor was certainly of a noble and loving nature, and his form and bearing afforded a good excuse for Desdemona's preference of him to the "curled darlings of her nation." But his Roman features and his elaborate manipulation of the character were not so well suited to the rapid alternations of Othello from absorbing love to consuming anger, from profound tenderness to yet more profound despair, from faith to doubt, from accomplished though erring retribution to overwhelming and fathomless remorse. His impersonation of the Moor was too statuesque, and, beside the quickening spirit of terror and pity which Edmund Kean infused into the part, seemed unreal, and was ineffective.

Macbeth again was a character in which Mr. Kemble, if it be compared with his other impersonations—for we are now contrasting him with himself in various parts—was less distinguished. Perhaps the recollection of his brother's pre-eminence in the Thane of Fife acted as a drawback upon his own conceptions.

Between the impersonations of Edmund Kean and Charles Kemble there was a fontal opposition arising from the opposite nature of their respective temperaments. Kean never played a part thoroughly: he disregarded unity altogether—probably he was incapable of forming for himself a complete or harmonious idea of any dramatic character. He acted detached portions alone, but upon these he flung himself with all his mind and soul and strength, moral and physical. For such abrupt and spasmodic efforts he possessed extraordinary physical qualifications.

His performance of Hamlet was perhaps Charles Kemble's highest achievement as an actor. Of the relations which it may have borne to his brother's impersonation of the philosophic prince we cannot speak, but of its superiority to all contemporary Hamlets we entertain no doubt. His form, his voice, his demeanour, his power of expressing sentiment, his profound melancholy, his meditative repose, were all strictly within the range of his physical and intellectual endowments, and had all been anxiously trained up to the highest point of precision and harmony. His performance of this arduous character indeed left nothing to desire except that occasionally the harmony of the execution had been broken by the disturbing forces of passion. Nothing could exceed Kemble's picture of loneliness of soul as he stood encircled by the Court of Denmark; what a gleam of joy beamed forth in his welcome of Horatio! Now at least he has one faithful counsellor and friend; he is no longer all alone. Nothing was ever more exquisite or touching than his "Go on, I follow thee," to the Ghost. Perfect love had cast out fear; faith prevailed over doubt; he will go, if need be, to the bourne of death and the grave: he will dive into the heart of this great mystery, but not in the spirit of despair, or at the summons of revenge, or in bravery, or in stoical defiance, but in the strength and in the whole armour of filial love. We have seen actors who fairly scolded their father's spirit, and others who quailed before it; but, except in Charles Kemble, we have never seen one whose looks and tones accorded with the spirit of that awful revelation of the prison house and the concealed crime and its required purgation, and expressed at once the sense of woe endured, anticipated, and stretching onward through a whole life.

We should not be rendering full justice to the memory of Charles Kemble were we to omit mentioning his exertions in the cause of the historical drama by restoring to it, or affording if for the first time, its proper scenery and costume. His brother had expunged much of the neglect and barbarism in these matters which had disgraced the stage of Betterton, Quin, and Garrick. He had rescued Othello from his footman's garb, Macbeth from his brigadier's uniform, and Brutus and Coriolanus from their surplices and slippers. But the younger Kemble went many steps further; and in his representations of the Moor of Venice, King John, and Henry IV., put upon the stage the senators and captains of the Signory, and the Barons of England, even in the very garb worn by them when their Dukes wedded the Adriatic, or Hotspur and Worcester fought at Shrewsbury. His "revivals" have indeed been eclipsed; but the drama owed much to Charles Kemble. His fine and cultivated taste was displayed in the skill with which he enlisted the arts in the service of the drama. His acquirements in literature were considerable. He spoke fluently and with elegance several modern languages; he was well versed in the masterpieces of their literature. Although not perhaps a deep classical scholar, he was familiar with the best writers of ancient Rome; and as the amusement of his declining years and comparative seclusion, he renewed his early knowledge of Greek, and prosecuted its difficult study with the zeal and energy of an aspirant for University honours.

Charles Kemble departed from us in the fulness of days, and attended by the respectful affection of a numerous circle of friends. His name will endure as long as the records of the stage retain their interest, and wherever the genius of the actor is held in honour.

MR. ALBERT MARSH produced at the Crown Theatre, Peckham, last Tuesday, for copyright purposes three playlets, The Little Champion, Domestic Insurance, and Chums Till Death. The first two were by Ben Landeck and the last-named was adapted and written by Mr. Marsh.

ONE of the finest theatres in India is the Empire Theatre, Bombay. It is newly constructed with up-to-date improvements, electric lighting, and fans, and its capacity at ruling prices is £200 and £300 respectively, on rental or share. RENAN'S dramatic arrangement of the Biblical epithalamium, "The Song of Songs," is to be given in aid of the National Tuberculosis Conference at the Cavendish Rooms, Mortimer-street, Regent-street, on Wednesday evening, Dec. 2. The poem will be recited by Mme. San Carolo, and the text illustrated in dumb show by her company.

A DRAMATIC choral symphony, entitled "Homage to Edgar Allan Poe," written by Joseph Holbrooke, was produced with great success by the Leeds Choral Union on Wednesday. The symphony is composed of settings of four of Poe's poems, "The Haunted Palace," "Hymn," "The City in the Sea," and "The Valley Nis." The soloists were Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Effie Martyn, Mr. Lloyd Chandos, and Mr. C. Knowles.

BI-LINGUAL and Irish plays will be included in the entertainments at the sixth annual Industrial Exhibition and Sale of Irish Manufactures and Produce at the Royal Horticultural Hall, Vincent-square, Westminster, from Tuesday to Saturday next, inclusive. The exhibition is organised by the Gaelic League in London, with the object of bringing before the public the commodities produced in Ireland, and to afford opportunities of testing their merits.

INTERESTING reminiscences are recalled by a Berlin writer in connection with the 500th performance of Le Nozze di Figaro, which was first performed on Sept. 24, 1790. The tickets were obtainable from Frau Frischmuth, "the wife of the Herr Kapellmeister," and a box for four persons cost about 6s. 6d. The orchestra of the National Theatre consisted of six violins, two violas, a 'cello, and a double bass, two oboes, two flutes, two bassoons, and two horns. Only three male singers and two ladies formed the operatic company, and the rest of the cast was recruited from the dramatic staff. The highest salary paid was about £3 10s. a week.

THE death took place at Leeds on the 5th inst. of Signor A. Romilli, musical-director of the Grand Theatre in that city. Signor Romilli, who was Italian by birth, was a brilliant accompanist and formerly officiated in that capacity for Madame Patti. He was conductor at Covent Garden under the late Sir Augustus Harris. Many charming compositions have come from his pen, among the most recent being The Maid and the Motor Man, which was toured by Mr. John Hart. The deceased composer was buried at Leeds cemetery on Sunday, the chief mourners being Mme. Romilli and her daughter (Mrs. Frank Lacy). The remains were followed to the grave by the whole of the staff and the orchestra of the Grand, Mr. Wynn Miller, the general-manager, representing Mr. John Hart.

THE PLAY-ACTORS.

Four one-act plays comprised the programme presented by the Play Actors on Sunday evening at the Court Theatre. So far as authorship is concerned, the premier honours must be given to the lady who was responsible for

"TILDA'S NEW HAT,"

A Comedy, in One Act, by "George Paston."

Mrs. Fishwick .....Miss Agnes Thomas
Tilda .....Miss Mabel Hackney
Daisy Meadows .....Miss Lorna Laurence
Walter Emerson Mr. Ashton Pearse

Although the author's name is given as "George Paston," Tilda's New Hat affords ample evidence of the hand of a woman. It seems, too, that the authoress of another of the playlets produced the same evening endeavours to hide her identity under a masculine name. This is rather a pity, because it is perfectly easy to detect the feminine mind, and if these lady dramatists imagine that they are successful in deceiving the playgoer as to their sex they are very much mistaken. But the authoress of Tilda's New Hat gives us a very entertaining half hour or so. It is a study of low life. Tilda Fishwick, a young woman employed in a jam factory, is very much in love with a compositor, Walter Emerson, and concerning him she is speaking to her mother at the opening of the piece. Mrs. Fishwick takes quite a secondary position in her own home, for she is ruled by her daughter, though she grumbles not a little at having to obey the behests of her own offspring. On this evening in particular Tilda is making a new hat, while the older woman is putting the finishing touches to a blouse which is to grace Tilda's comely figure. Mrs. Fishwick engages in a nagging conversation, telling her daughter that when she was her age she had a bust like a bandbox, to which Tilda retorts that she at any rate prefers to be able to see her feet! More biting repartee is indulged in until Emerson calls to see Tilda, who promptly bustles her mother into another room in order that she may be able to hold proper converse with her sweetheart. The latter is a weak-minded and harmless specimen of humanity who belongs to "improvement societies" and expresses a desire to "form" Tilda's mind—a proposition that does not altogether meet with that young lady's approval. He leaves for a few minutes, and in his absence there enters Daisy Meadows, with whom he had formerly "walked out." She upbraids Tilda for having stolen her sweetheart from her, and Tilda, in her blunt, good-humoured, kind-hearted way shows her how to bedeck herself and to arrange her hair so as to catch a young man's fancy. She even lends her new hat for the purpose, and arranges to trim Daisy's old one while the latter is wearing Tilda's magnificent confection. Emerson returns from his errand, and Daisy's changed appearance excites in him a rapture of admiration. He and Daisy go out together, and then Tilda realises that her lesson to her rival in the art of feminine titivation has resulted in a self-sacrifice. However, she partly consoles herself with the discovery that Emerson's legs are crooked, and that he is, after all, a noodle.

Miss Mabel Hackney acted with delightful freshness and buoyancy as Tilda; and Miss Agnes Thomas was seen in an altogether admirable study of the nagging, grumbling, yet for all that affectionate mother. Miss Thomas was capitally made-up, and she furnished a very natural characterisation of a type of woman in lowly circumstances we have all met. Mr. Ashton Pearse as Walter Emerson submitted a clever piece of character acting in a part which somewhat resembles our old friend Uriah Heep. Miss Lorna Laurence gave a commendable portraiture of Daisy Meadows.

Another item on the programme was

"THE SENTIMENTAL BRAY,"

Sergeant-Major Hunter ..Mr. W. Lawson Butt
Colour-Sergeant Bray ....Mr. Jackson Wilcox
Sergeant Best .....Mr. Reginald Rivington
Sergeant Sparkes .....Mr. Harold Chapin
Sergeant Dash .....Mr. P. Percival Clark
Sergeant Renny .....Mr. Norman Trevor
Coxswain .....Mr. Norman MacOwan
Cerizola .....Mr. Ivan Berlyn
Azopardi .....Mr. A. E. Filmer
Sis .....Miss Sybil Ruskin

In this we were treated to a strong dramatic situation. The scene is the "Sergeants' Mess-room at Hong Kong." Sergeant Renny is head-over-heels in love with a little native girl Sis, concerning whom there is some bartering between two half-breeds, Cerizola and Azopardi. Renny arranges to take the girl away in a pinnace at night, but his plans are foiled by Cerizola and Azopardi, who demand the assistance of Sergeant-Major Hunter, who is in the power of the two men by reason of his having accepted bribes from them for contracts. However, Colour-Sergeant Bray's sentiment, aided by his knowledge of the dishonest transaction, triumphs over the unscrupulous schemes of the contractors, the other members of the mess agree to stand by Renny, and Sis is taken care of by the wife of one of the sergeants until her lover can safely leave with her. Mr. Bone may be congratulated on an excellent piece of dramatic writing. Mr. Norman Trevor as Sergeant Renny, Mr. W. Lawson Butt as Sergeant-Major Hunter, Mr. Jackson Wilcox as Colour-Sergeant Bray, and Messrs. Ivan Berlyn and A. E. Filmer as Cerizola and Azopardi respectively acted most effectively; while Miss Sybil Ruskin made a pathetic figure as Sis.

"MARAQUITA,"

Miguel Carmeno .....Mr. Norman MacOwan
Pedro .....Mr. Edmund Waller
Avaristo .....Mr. P. Percival Clark
Senorita Inez .....Miss Nancy Grogan
Maraquita .....Miss Rita Milman

This is an unconvincing and unsatisfactory piece of work. The playlet is drawn out to a wearisome length. To the living-room of Miguel Carmeno's hut in a camp farm in North Argentine there comes Maraquita, the wife whom he had deserted. The campers are in dire straits for water. Maraquita, who is disguised in male garb, has some liquor in her leathern flask, and she permits Miguel's assistant Pedro and Avaristo, a carrier, to a drink of it; but she refuses to extend the same courtesy to Miguel. His thirst maddens him, and he kills the woman just as he is told that rain is falling. The piece was done sufficient justice to by the members of the cast.

It is not possible to bestow a high meed of praise upon

A Comedy, in One Act, by L. C. Fenn.

Mr. Armstrong .....Mr. Edward Rigby
Mrs. Armstrong .....Miss Ida Phillips
Maria .....Miss Rita Tomkins
German Rug-Seller ....Mr. Murri Moncrieff
Police Sergeant .....Mr. Patric Curwen

This needs much curtailment; indeed, it needs more than that, for it ought to be re-written. It is the story of a young couple who desire to commemorate the anniversary of their wedding by giving a present to each other. A German rug-seller calls at the house, receives a pound from the wife for a rug which he had stolen from a neighbouring residence, and then, in the wife's temporary absence, sells the same article to the husband. A police sergeant who is seeking the vendor recognises the rug as stolen property, and indulges in pertinent remarks as to the liability of the receivers thereof. Both deny that they have purchased it, and when the sergeant has gone the thief emerges from his hiding-place in an ante-room—whither he has been placed by the husband to avoid his being seen by the wife—and as both continue to deny that they purchased it from him he tells them that he may reasonably conclude that the rug belongs to himself, and away he goes with it and with the two sums of money paid for it. Mr. Edward Rigby was amusing as the husband and Mr. Murri Moncrieff was highly entertaining as the German. Miss Ida Phillips submitted a pleasing impersonation as the wife.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

How Women Ruin Men gives many evidences of the resourceful dramatist, and from the way the drama was received it may be concluded that the piece has commenced a long and successful career. Nothing appeared to have been overlooked in the stage-management, and it went with the smoothness that indicated careful rehearsal.

About twelve months prior to the opening of the play Lieut. Jack Fairclough had been engaged to Sylvia Grey, a young lady of a wayward disposition, who had supplanted her sister Mercy. The latter was passionately in love with Jack, but was unable to demonstrate her affection, and Jack was fascinated by Sylvia. Having encountered Bruno Schlag, a very plausible person, and reputed wealthy, Sylvia perceived a means of gratifying her desires of "enjoying life." She consequently threw over the poor lieutenant and arranged to go abroad with Schlag to teach German girls the English language, Schlag having managed in London to get hold of £10,000, which he embezzled. The play opens in a room in Schlag's house in Berlin, where at 2 a.m. he and Sylvia arrive from a gaming table, and he tells her he is "broke." They had during the last twelve months been married, and lived at a great rate, and now the question was what should they do? Schlag had been able to steal some plans of fortifications which would be of great value to the French Government, but no means of realising the "property" were apparent. In their desperate plight Sylvia and Bruno decide to shoot themselves, but are disturbed by the entry of a servant, who brings a letter from Jack Fairclough, whose uncle had just died and left him a large fortune. Thinking Sylvia was true to him, Jack renews his offer of marriage. Schlag and his wife thereupon agree that Sylvia shall marry Jack, but first have £20,000 settled on her, while the plans of the fortifications are to be so placed that Jack shall be arrested as a spy.

Seven days later Jack and Sylvia arrive after their marriage, Jack having the intention to sail for England on the morrow. Mercy has succeeded in tracing her sister, and comes to warn her that she knows she has committed bigamy, and high words pass between them. Bruno in the meantime is playing his part, and the act ends with the arrest of Jack as a spy. For several months Jack remains in prison, where he receives affectionate letters from Sylvia, who is all the time staying with her husband Bruno. Jack's friends eventually prove his innocence, and succeed in getting him out of prison. He repairs to Bruno's flat in search of his supposed wife. Seeing Jack, Sylvia obtains a revolver and hands it to Bruno. She reveals to Jack the fact that she is not his wife, but the wife of Bruno. The two men engage in a struggle, but Sylvia stuns Jack with a poker, and the villainous pair are about to throw their victim through the window to his death on the pavement below when Mercy appears with some gendarmes, and claims the supposed corpse.

The third act finds Jack in his lodgings in London, broken down in health and spirits, with Mercy, disguised as a nurse, in attendance upon him. Jack gives Mercy a message for his brother Maurice, who is expected shortly from New Zealand, but he arrives in time to find that Jack, overcome by his tribulations, has hanged himself. Having learned the cause which prompted the rash act, Maurice vows never to rest until he avenges his brother's death.

Sylvia is next seen at the Earl's Court Exhibition, where, thirsting for more money, she manages to be introduced to Maurice. In furtherance of his plot against Sylvia and Bruno, Maurice suggests elopement to Paris, and Sylvia agrees, leaving her husband to do as he likes. A card dropped by Maurice tells Bruno where they have very likely gone, and he follows. The last scene is a bedroom in Le Leo d'Or, Paris, where Sylvia finds out that she has been duped by Maurice, and that her husband has threatened to kill her. Bruno arrives, and Sylvia endeavours to elude him; but he catches her, and in a mad rage cuts her throat. Mercy appears with Maurice, when Bruno confesses to having murdered his wife, and is arrested, and the piece ends with the mating of Mercy and Maurice.

Miss Doris Brookes as Sylvia displayed remarkable talent, and acted with effect; Mercy Grey, the devoted sister, was excellently presented by Miss Conyers Radcliffe; Mr. Sidney Rennef duplicated the brothers Jack (the ruined man) and Maurice (the avenger) with sterling effect; Mr. Richard Vane's Bruno Schlag was a most convincing piece of work; the bombastic Major Bagstock was ably portrayed by Mr. Stephen Langton; Mr. Alex. Wilson Wynne was also amusing as Freddy; Mr. Walter Dale as Jimmy Chucket and Miss Kitty Russell as Jennie Chucket have a lot of comedy incidents at their disposal to which they gave excellent effect, their songs being several times encored. Mr. Matt. Russell as Dr. Methin, Mr. Fred Astley as Karl Swartz, Mr. John Blyth as the attendant, Miss Dorothy Dewhurst as Belle Plantin, and Miss Annie Brunnette as Mrs. Meadows all did well. The singing of "Distant faces" in the fourth act by Miss Clare Wolverson was much appreciated. The scenery and dresses were pretty and effective.

A week's season of Yiddish plays began at the Pavilion Theatre on Monday, when the Jewish tragedian Sigmund H. Feinman presented a fine impersonation in the drama Hear, O Israel. During the week Mr. Feinman has given representations of his favourite characters, which have already been noticed in these columns. The Yiddish audience received his efforts with enthusiasm.

AMATEURS AT ALBERT HALL.

A sharp contrast, if nothing more, was secured in the presentation of two new playlets by the Pivot Amateur Dramatic Club in the West Theatre of the Albert Hall on Saturday evening. The first on the programme was a comedietta by E. Rynd and Amy Nankivell, entitled

"MR. RIGGLES JOINS THE CHOIR."

Mrs. Riggles .....Miss Sylvia Dawson
Mrs. Smith .....Miss Helena Keatley Moore
Miss Margaret .....Miss Ruby Ginner
The Curate .....Mr. Jack Hulbert
Mrs. Williams .....Miss Dorothy Topham

A shrewd sense of character is revealed by the authors of the trifle, but the drift of the dialogue, which contains a certain amount of mild humour, is by no means clear. It essays to tell how the young curate of a village church, who is about to be married, calls upon one of his parishioners, Mr. Riggles, an estimable member of his congregation, but a questionable vocalist, who makes it a strict custom always to be a bar in front of the choir, to beg him not to sing during the celebration service. Mr. Riggles is not at home, so the delicate matter has to be settled with his wife and his sister, who is called in for the purpose. In the process the curate is so confused by the volubility of the ladies and their wilful misinterpretation of his meaning that when he leaves it is with the understanding that Riggles is actually to be asked to join the choir! The characters, supposed, we took it, to be inhabitants of a country village, were all more or less invested with a decided cockney accent, especially in the case of Mrs. Riggles, a part acted with much quaintness by Miss Sylvia Dawson. Riggles' solemn and strong-minded sister was ably portrayed by Miss Dorothy Topham, whose metallic utterance and characteristic make-up were invaluable in the part. A more pretentious piece was found in the fantasy, in two acts, by Gabrielle Festing and Dorothy Hart, entitled

"ST. JOHN'S EVE."

Duke Silvio .....Mr. Alec Dyer
Gualdrado .....Mr. Jack Hulbert
Zapata .....Mr. Walter Armstrong
Countess Anna .....Miss Chick
Princess Primavera .....Miss Joan Edridge
Attendant .....Mr. Hockin
Silence .....Miss Doris Marzetti
Dawn .....Miss Isobel English
Dusk .....Miss Vivienne Honey
Summer .....Miss Ruby Ginner
Echo .....Miss Irene Hayter

A well-imagined fairy story is told in St. John's Eve, which, however, would not lose by the elision of half the characters and two-thirds of the dialogue. There was once a witch who revenged herself on maids of honour for any little offence by turning them into statues, which come to life for one hour every St. John's Eve, but at the end of that brief period have to return to stone unless someone is found who will take their place. Up to the rising of the curtain on Saturday five maidens, with the symbolical names of Silence, Dawn, &c., had been thus transformed, and at the witching hour the quintet moved off their pedestals in the cypress glade, and, after chanting weird incantations, began to dance. The Princess Primavera chances to pass, and preferring comparative extinction to wedding a man whom she detests, changes places with Silence and becomes inanimate. The maiden thus released obtains the love of the Duke Silvio, but when St. John's Eve comes round again, and the Princess returns to life, Silence feels it incumbent upon her to resume her statuesque position. She and the Duke take an affecting farewell, and Silence is about to return to her place beneath the cypress when the Duke's uncle, who for some reason which the actor by his indistinctness would not allow us to hear, is the victim of a settled melancholy, takes the place of Silence on the pedestal, leaving her to live happily ever after. The performance revealed at least two performers of talent in Miss Doris Marzetti, who was a pretty and well-spoken Silence, and Mr. Alec Dyer, who possesses a fine speaking voice and made a gallant and regal Duke, the love scene between the pair being admirably carried out. Miss Joan Edridge prattled prettily as the Princess; and Miss Chick revealed comedy gifts in the part of a buxom Court lady. The piece was elaborately mounted, and the performance, which included songs and a recital of Browning, was under the direction of Miss Elsie Fogerty.

A CLEVER SCENIC ARTIST.

By the courtesy of the stage-manager (Mr. Crocker) of the Coliseum we have lately viewed a beautiful scene of the Old Market Place, Plymouth, painted by Mr. George Tweddell, a recent production of that accomplished scenic artist. Under a blue summer sky the fine spire of Plymouth church is seen rising over the ancient houses grouped round the market-place, while in the foreground the old-world shops, innocent of plate-glass windows, are filled with a profusion of vegetables, fruit, flowers, and fish. In the centre of the picture is an old cross, surrounded by flowers, and behind the cross is a huge old wagon, evidently just in from the country. Such is a simple description of Mr. Tweddell's charming picture of Plymouth in the Past, which is seen to advantage on the fine stage of the Coliseum; but it gives little idea of the rich colours, and what artists call "atmosphere," of the scene, or the delightful play of light and shade among the quaint old roofs of the over-hanging shops in the market-place, or the loving care and finish with which the artist has painted the flowers, fruit, vegtables, and fish in the immediate foreground, not to mention a particularly fine and realistic crab in the fishmonger's shop on the right hand of the scene. Mr. Tweddell's scene does not require much assistance from the side wings; but the addition of one, or at the most two, real stalls set up on the stage would add greatly to the effect; they are picturesque in shape and easily made by any stage-carpenter. In most old market towns in England they are seen, and the pattern seems to have altered little in a hundred years or more.

Looking at Mr. Tweddell's well-painted Market Place, one wondered how, in the past, the idea was formed that stage scenes, when not seen at a great distance, were unsightly daubs, and the scenic artist only a sort of superior kind of house-painter. Were not such men as Salvator Rosa, Inigo Jones, and Stanfield scene painters, and do not some of the greatest artists of our day lend their aid in any important production? Granted the various details are on a large scale and boldly painted, and also its distance (and electric light) that "lends enchantment to the view," the modern scene-painter is an artist in the truest sense of the word. Tempera, or distemper colours, to use a more homely term, is a most difficult pigment to use, as it has a nasty trick of drying a different shade; while blues and greens require much experience, as they must be true in effect by artificial light. Mr. Tweddell's Market Place does not require a story to be written round it on the immortal "Crummles" plan, but would do admirably for any play of a slightly nautical subject, and there are scores of such written. It must also be remembered that Plymouth was the port for a huge number of the wooden walls of Old England, and the sailors' costumes of that period were most picturesque, and the old market-place would form a charming background for a pretty ballet in a comic opera; therefore, Mr. Tweddell's clever scene would do admirably for a minor theatre or touring company. Mr. George Tweddell has had many successes in the past, and his work has been warmly praised in the London and provincial Press.

A farce which has set two continents, America and Australia, laughing has a good claim to produce considerable laughter in England. On Monday evening The Man from Mexico was well received and the audience laughed merrily. The main story has several side issues, and in outline is as follows:—Mr. Benjamin Fitzhugh is a New York citizen in easy circumstances. He has a charming daughter, whose engagement to a rising young architect, Richard Dornton, is to be announced at a festive gathering. During the absence of Mrs. Fitzhugh on a supposed visit to her mother, Fitzhugh takes the opportunity of paying a visit to the Cleopatra, a club of somewhat shady reputation. Mrs. Fitzhugh is suspicious of her husband, and instead of visiting her mother pays a visit to the club in order to prove the guilt or innocence of her husband. She is heavily veiled and has been seen by only one man, a waiter, Louis, at the club. On the very evening of the visit the club is raided by the police. Mrs. Fitzhugh gets away without being recognised and without seeing her husband. Fitzhugh, however, falls into the hands of the police, and under a false name he is sentenced to thirty days' imprisonment, chiefly because of his impudence to the judge. Early in the opening of the play we find Mr. Fitzhugh recovering from his unfortunate night's carousal, and Cook, the detective, calls to take him to gaol to serve his thirty days.

Roderick Majors, a well-intentioned but muddling friend, sees the judge and tries to get the sentence altered; but all to no purpose, and in desperate straits he breaks off his daughter's engagement to Dornton in order to obtain the influence of another admirer of hers, Edward Farrar, a nephew of the judge who gave Fitzhugh thirty days. Farrar, however, can do nothing, and poor Fitzhugh sees there is no alternative to serving his time in prison. To account for his absence he proclaims to all and sundry that he proposes to take a trip to Mexico. Mrs. Fitzhugh announces her intention to accompany her husband, but the ever-faithful friend Majors dissuades her from this.

We now see Fitzhugh in the striped garb of the American convict. He has considerable difficulty in living up to the strict discipline of the prison, but Majors again comes to the rescue, and introduces his friend Loveall, the warden of the prison, to convict 77. A friendship springs up between warden and convict, and the former undertakes to deliver a letter dated from Mexico to Mrs. Fitzhugh, and to say he has met her husband in Mexico. At length the thirty days are served, and in order to welcome the traveller home Mrs. Fitzhugh, her sister, Sally Grace, and their friend Nettie Majors, dress in Mexican fashion, rub up their Spanish, and order a dinner of Mexican dishes. Fitzhugh arrives home in all the splendour of a Spanish costume, and he makes but a weak attempt to understand the Spanish language in which he is addressed. He describes a bull-fight in very unconvincing manner, and he has to live up to so many lies and deceptions that his wife grows suspicious. Her suspicions are confirmed by remarks heard from Cook, the detective, Louis, the waiter (a fellow-prisoner with Fitzhugh), and Loveall, the warden. Benjamin Fitzhugh confesses that his visit to Mexico was a myth, and in reality he has been to prison, and to his surprise he learns from his wife that she, too, was at the Cleopatra on the night of the raid. Explanations follow; Dornton becomes really engaged to Sally Grace, Farrar finds a sweetheart in the friend, Nettie Majors, and everyone is happy and satisfied.

The piece was well played by Messrs. Robert Arthur and George Willoughby's company. On Monday evening laughter prevailed, and the audience were evidently delighted. Mr. Stanley Cook as Benjamin Fitzhugh worked hard, and was conspicuously successful; Mr. George Willoughby did smart and effective duty as the well-intentioned friend, Roderick Majors; Mr. Walter Gay was an animated and pleasing Warden Loveall; Mr. Fred Lewis contributed a very clever and funny sketch of the voluble German, Von Schmidt; Mr. Hugh Ardale was a polished Edward Farrar; Mr. Rupert Stutfield played carefully and earnestly as Richard Dornton; particular praise was due to Mr. Ernest A. Douglas for a quiet but ably effective performance as Cook, the detective; while Mr. James Schnapper as O'Mullins, Mr. Arthur Cornell as Googan, and Mr. Walter Champney as Louis did capital work in smaller parts. Miss Emily Fitzroy, attractive and pleasing, was a very successful Mrs. Fitzhugh; Miss Fyfe Alexander was a graceful and very charming Sally; Miss Amy Francis infused much vivacity into the part of Nettie Majors; and Miss Doris Digby was satisfactory as Miranda.

THE SHAKESPEARE VARIORUMS.

We have received from the J. B. Lippincott Company a copy of their fine edition of "The Tragedy of Richard the Third." It has been edited by Horace Howard Furness, jun., and is the sixteenth volume of the New Variorum Edition of the Works of William Shakespeare. The editor has used as a basis the text of the first folio edition of 1623, incorporating the additions of the quartos, and recording omissions and transpositions in the textual notes, together with a commentary containing criticisms from the days of Pope to the present day. The appendix contains the stage history of the play; discusses the text, the date of composition, and the source of the plot; with criticisms by English and German authors too voluminous to be included in the Commentary. This admirably-edited volume will be a treasure and a joy to all students of Shakespeare. The scholarship, industry, and knowledge used in its preparation must have been extraordinary, and it is superbly printed and excellently well "got up."

SHAKESPEARE'S SCHOOLING.

Happily John Shakespeare was at no expense for the education of his four sons, writes Mr. Sidney Lee in his "Life of William Shakespeare." They were entitled to free tuition at the grammar school of Stratford, which was reconstituted on a mediæval foundation by Edward VI. The eldest son, William, probably entered the school in 1571, when Walter Roche was retiring from the mastership in favour of Simon Hunt, B.A. Hunt seems to have been succeeded in 1577 by one Thomas Jenkins, whose place was taken in 1579 by John Cottom, of London. As was customary in provincial schools, the poet learned to write the "Old English" character, which resembles that still in vogue in Germany. He was never taught the Italian script, which at the time was rapidly winning its way in fashionable cultured society, and is now universal among Englishmen. Until his death Shakespeare's "Old English" handwriting testified to his provincial education. The general instruction was mainly confined to the Latin language and literature. From the Latin accidence, boys of the period, at schools of the type of that at Stratford, were led, through conversation books like the "Sententiæ Pueriles" and Lily's grammar, to the perusal of such authors as Seneca, Terence, Cicero, Virgil, Plautus, Ovid, and Horace. The eclogues of the popular renaissance poet, Mantuanus, were often preferred to Virgil's for beginners. The rudiments of Greek were occasionally taught in Elizabethan grammar schools to very promising pupils; but such coincidences as have been detected between expressions in Greek plays and in Shakespeare seem due to accident, and not to any study, either at school or elsewhere, of the Athenian drama.

Dr. Farmer enunciated in his "Essay on Shakespeare's Learning" (1767) the theory that Shakespeare knew no language but his own, and owed whatever knowledge he displayed of the classics and of Italian and French literature to English translations. But several of the books in French and Italian whence Shakespeare derived the plots of his dramas—Belleforest's "Histoires Tragiques," Ser Giovanni's "Il Pecorone," and Cinthio's "Hecatommithi," for example—were not accessible to him in English translations; and on more general grounds the theory of his ignorance is adequately confuted. A boy with Shakespeare's exceptional alertness of intellect, during whose schooldays a training in Latin classics lay within reach, could hardly lack in future years all means of access to the literature of France and Italy.

With the Latin and French languages, indeed, and with many Latin poets of the school curriculum, Shakespeare in his writings openly acknowledged his acquaintance. In Henry V. the dialogue in many scenes is carried on in French which is grammatically accurate if not idiomatic. In the mouth of his schoolmasters, Holofernes in Love's Labour's Lost and Sir Hugh Evans in Merry Wives of Windsor, Shakespeare placed Latin phrases drawn directly from Lily's grammar, from the "Sententiæ Pueriles," and from "the good old Mantuan." The influence of Ovid, especially the "Metamorphoses," was apparent throughout his earliest literary work, both poetic and dramatic, and is discernible in The Tempest, his latest play (v. i. 33 seq.). In the Bodleian Library there is a copy of the Aldine edition of Ovid's "Metamorphoses" (1502), and on the title is the signature "Wm. She.," which experts have declared—not quite conclusively—to be a genuine autograph of the poet. But, although Ovid's Latin text was certainly familiar to him, his closest adaptations of Ovid's "Metamorphoses" often reflect the phraseology of the popular English version by Arthur Golding, of which some seven editions were issued between 1565 and 1597. From Plautus Shakespeare drew the plot of the Comedy of Errors, but it is just possible that Plautus's comedies, too, were accessible in English. Shakespeare had no title to rank as a classical scholar, and he did not disdain a liberal use of translations. His lack of exact scholarship fully account for the "small Latin and less Greek" with which he was credited by his scholarly friend, Ben Jonson. But Aubrey's report that "he understood Latin pretty well" need not be contested, and his knowledge of French may be estimated to have equalled his knowledge of Latin, while he doubtless possessed just sufficient acquaintance of Italian to enable him to discern the drift of an Italian poem or novel.

Of the few English books accessible to him in his schooldays, the chief was the English Bible, either in the popular Genevan version, first issued in a complete form in 1560, or in the Bishops' revision of 1568, which the Authorised Version of 1611 closely followed. References to Scriptural characters and incidents are not conspicuous in Shakespeare's plays, but, such as they are, they are drawn from all parts of the Bible, and indicate that general acquaintance with the narrative of both Old and New Testaments which a clever boy would be certain to acquire either in the schoolroom or at church on Sundays. Shakespeare quotes or adapts Biblical phrases with far greater frequency than he makes allusion to episodes in Biblical history. But many such phrases enjoyed proverbial currency, and others, which were more recondite, were borrowed from Holinshed's "Chronicles" and secular works whence he drew his plots. As a rule his use of Scriptural phraseology, as of Scriptural history, suggests youthful reminiscence and the assimilative tendency of the mind in a stage of early development rather than close and continuous study of the Bible in adult life.

Shakespeare was a schoolboy in July, 1575, when Queen Elizabeth made a progress through Warwickshire on a visit to her favourite, the Earl of Leicester, at his castle of Kenilworth. References have been detected in Oberon's vision in Shakespeare's Midsummer Night's Dream (II. i. 148-68) to the fantastic pageants and masques with which the Queen during her stay was entertained in Kenilworth Park. Leicester's residence was only fifteen miles from Stratford, and it is possible that Shakespeare went thither with his father to witness some of the open-air festivities; but two full descriptions which were published in 1576, in pamphlet form, gave Shakespeare knowledge of all that took place. Shakespeare's opportunities of recreation outside Stratford were in any case restricted during his schooldays. His father's financial difficulties grew steadily, and they caused his removal from school at an unusually early age. Probably in 1577, when he was thirteen, he was enlisted by his father in an effort to restore his decaying fortunes. "I have been told heretofore," wrote Aubrey, "by some of the neighbours that when he was a boy he exercised his father's trade," which, according to the writer, was that of a butcher. It is possible that John's ill-luck at the period compelled him to confine himself to this occupation, which in happier days formed only one branch of his business. His son may have been formally apprenticed to him. An early Stratford tradition describes him as "a butcher's apprentice." "When he kill'd a calf," Aubrey proceeds, less convincingly, "he would doe it in a high style and make a speech. There was at that time another butcher's son in this towne, that was held not at all inferior to him for a naturall witt his acquaintance, and coetaneu, but dyed young."

ACTORS' ASSOCIATION.

Minutes of the Council meeting held at 353, Strand, on Tuesday. There were present Mr. Cecil Raleigh (in the chair), Messrs. Fred Grove, Franklyn Walford, Jackson Wilcox, Clarence Derwent, and Fewlass Llewellyn; Misses Lucy Sibley, Marion Lind, and Mr. Hubert Blount, secretary.

The minutes of the previous meeting were read and confirmed.

A letter was read from Mr. Robson Paige expressing his willingness to again serve on the Council if elected, and the secretary was instructed to notify Mr. Paige to this effect.

The question of Sunday performances in theatres having been brought forward the Council addressed a letter on the subject to the Lord Chamberlain, and have received a reply from him suggesting that the Council should seek the information of its legal adviser on the matter. Pending Mr. Mote's reply the discussion was adjourned.

The honorary solicitors reported having written letters and advised members.

Two nominations for election were made, and the secretary received instructions to forward a list of members to the candidates asking whether they could not find someone to propose and second them.

Election of new member: Miss Marie Pera, proposed by Mr. Cecil Raleigh, and seconded by Mr. Fred Grove, was elected.

The agency reported the engagement of Mr. Arthur Dennis with Mr. Hunter, Mr. Edwin Coates with Miss Hancock, Miss Ethel St. Barbe with Mr. Herbert Ross, Miss Florence Harcourt with Mr. Herbert Ross, and Mr. J. Knox Orde with Mr. Fred Mouillot.

The standard contract was again discussed and adjourned until the next meeting.

The Council received a deputation from the A.U., and Mr. Kenneth Blackmore spoke on behalf of such deputation. A long and interesting duscussion about the minimum wage ensued.

Miss Beatrice Chester asked the secretary to inform the Council that she had lost her basket at a music hall, and to ask the hon. solicitor whether he could do anything in the matter. The secretary was instructed to ask Miss Chester to forward a full statement of the facts to Mr. Mote.

The secretary informed the Council that several members of the French company lately playing at Terry's Theatre had taken advantage of the invitation to become hon. members of the A.A. during their visit, had made use of the rooms, and had expressed their thanks to the Council for the hospitality extended to them.

CONVEYANCE OF STAGE SCENERY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE ERA.

SIR,—The number and persistent reiteration of enquiries concerning the exact conditions which govern the entry of theatrical effects into the United States of America led us to recently make special investigations into the whole question through our American connections; and, as the information which we have received is of vital importance to artists who may be contemplating a tour of the States, we venture to believe that its insertion in your columns in extenso will prove a boon to those of your readers to whom it is of peculiar interest.

Messrs. Davies, Turner and Co., of 24, Whitehall-street, New York, make the following observations:—

"With reference to theatrical traffic. This may be divided into three classes, such as costumes as are of the period, which are generally admitted free as passengers' luggage if they accompany such passenger and are for his use and convenience, the incidental use of the stage not being considered a reason for charging duty; costumes of other periods, or fancy costumes; props and scenery.

"Where the goods in the second category accompany the passenger it is usual to send them to public stores if the aggregate valuation exceeds $100.

"Scenery, props., and such costumes as are on the manifest have to be entered in the regular way. If they are the property of the passenger an exhibition bond may be given, in which an obligation is taken to either pay the duty or to export goods within six months. This bond on application may be extended by the Secretary of the Treasury for another six months, but after that time export or payment of duty must take place.

"For such goods as have been entered on invoice, we have been able to arrange up to the present to have examination take place at the theatre, and goods are taken immediately from the dock to the theatre by bonded trucks, and examination usually takes place within a day or two, depending on what is required by the consignee. For example, if we had to make entry in the morning and it was necessary to use the goods that night, arrangements could be made with the examiner to go there that same day. If, on the other hand, they were not intended to be used for some weeks, then he would go at his leisure.

"It is very important to impress on your friends if they should be sending over productions which they expect to enter in bond that evidence of use be shown on the goods. For example, if boots were received in the original packages from bootmakers and showed no evidence on the soles of having been used, very likely the Customs would exact duty; the same thing with costumes. The law does not require any extensive use, but there must be some.

"The ordinary exactions with reference to invoicing of merchandise are required, too, with theatrical goods. Contents of each package should be specified separately, and value of each article detailed. With properties and costumes the material of which they are composed should be mentioned, so that they can be classified; if of wool the weights should be given."

Should any of your subscribers require advice upon this matter, we need hardly say that our services and the result of our long experience will gladly be placed at their disposal.

The intricate formalities and the peculiar method of preparing documents render it absolutely essential for some expert aid to be enlisted; and, as this has been a special feature of our business during the period of nearly forty years in which we have been established, we have no hesitation in asserting that the best means of minimising trouble and preventing difficulties from arising, with the consequent loss of time and money, is to consult—Yours faithfully,

HAROLD DAVIES.

"THE GIRL I LOVE."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE ERA.

SIR,—I note from a paragraph appearing in last week's issue of The Era that Mr. Herbert Leonard is changing the title of a new piece of his from The Kiss of Judas to The Girl I Love. A play of mine by the title of The Girl I Love was produced by me at the Theatre Royal, Workington, in June, 1904, and was duly licensed; therefore, I claim the title to be mine. I have played it frequently since, and am shortly arranging to send same on tour.

If Mr. Leonard would like to communicate with me, I can satisfy him as to my legal claim. My address is 17, Sydney-street, South Kensington.—Yours faithfully,

FRED MAXWELL.

Pavilion, Leicester, Nov. 12, 1908.

ACTORS' UNION.

The usual committee meeting of the A.U. took place on the 5th inst. at 49, Bedford-street, and the following were present: Messrs. Gerald Mirrielees (chairman), Robert M. Taylor, A. Maitland Stapley, Orlando Barnett, Leslie Arthur, Cecil G. Calvert, E. Y. Rae, H. Tripp-Edgar, and Kenneth Blackmore (secretary).

Letters were received from Messrs. Geo. P. Lester, J. Hastings Batson, Fred F. Loyd, Frank S. Strickland, James English, Jerrold Heather, Henry Bedford, Edward Chester, Oswald Marshall, and Frank Gerald.

The minutes of the previous meeting were read and passed.

It was stated that Mr. Walter L. Rignold has accepted the invitation of the Executive to serve on the committee.

The secretary was instructed to inform the sanitary authorities of the condition of a provincial theatre, and to ask them to investigate the matter.

A member who was out of benefit having applied for a loan, the secretary was instructed to inform him that as only members in benefit are entitled to make applications for loans, the committee regret they are unable to accede to his request.

A member having reported that a provincial company were playing fourteen performances for one week's salary, the secretary was instructed to notify him that, as no complaint had been received from an A.U. member in the company, nothing could be done in the matter.

Dr. Courtenay Dunn, of Fairview, Castle-road, Torquay, was appointed one of the hon. medical officers for that town.

The secretary was instructed to send particulars of a case, on behalf of a member, to the hon. solicitor, and to ask him to write a letter to the management in question.

A member having written from Australia with reference to an insurance scheme, the secretary was instructed to inform him that the Union cannot take the matter up.

A member having written from America asking for certain information, the secretary was instructed to comply with the request.

One new member was elected.

Mr. H. Naylor Grimson presided at the usual weekly meeting of the Actors' Union held on Tuesday afternoon at Hummum's Hotel. Among those present were Messrs. Leslie Arthur, Orlando Barnett, J. W. Braithwaite, Frank Gerald, Edgar L. Hocking, D. Lewin Mannering, Frank Melrose, E. Y. Rae, Langford Reed, and Mr. A. Maitland Stapley; and Mesdames W. Bentley, Florence Creagh, May Conrade, Maud Henley, Irene Moncrieff, Kitty Marion, Mildred Silvestre, Rosaline Thorne, and Laura Vernon.

An announcement was made by the Secretary (Mr. Kenneth Blackmore) to the effect that a general meeting of the Union would be held on Dec. 1 to consider the advisability of altering the present method of payment of subscription. It has been thought that it might be more convenient for the members to pay the sum of 1s. 8d. at the end of each month instead of 6d. a week for forty weeks. It was also announced that the third annual dinner of the Union would be held on Sunday, Dec. 18.

Mr. Leslie Arthur proposed the following resolution:—

"That this meeting of the Actors' Union strongly condemns the action of Mr. George Edwardes and Mr. Seymour Hicks in engaging artists through the Daily Mirror and the Daily Express, as the profession at the present time is very much overcrowded."

Mrs. Walter Bentley seconded, and the resolution was carried unanimously, after a brief discussion, in which, among others, Mr. Frank Gerald took part.

It was suggested that an address-book containing information as to suitable apartments in the provinces should be kept in the offices of the Union.

THE FISHER FAMILY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE ERA.

SIR,—During the greater part of the nineteenth century there existed in the Eastern Counties a dramatic company known as the Norfolk and Suffolk Company of Comedians, managed by various members of the well-known Fisher family. There were at least four generations of these Fishers, and some of them, notably David, sen. (who died in 1858), and David, jun. (who died in 1887), appeared on the London stage with considerable success. The latter had a son, also on the stage, of whom I have no record later than that given in Pascoe's Dramatic List, published in 1880.

Can you, or your readers, inform me whether this gentleman is still living, or whether any members of this talented family are now in the dramatic profession? If so, I should esteem it a favour if you could furnish me with their address.—Yours faithfully,

RUTH CARVER (née Fisher).

MR. WILLIAM HAVILAND AND MISS EDYTH LATIMER.

One of the finest actors on the stage, Mr. William Haviland excels especially as an elocutionist, and for this reason Mr. Tree selected him some two years ago for the difficult part of Prospero in his production of The Tempest, a rôle which, in the hands of any but the most accomplished master of the art of speaking blank verse, would prove tedious in the extreme. Last year, moreover, Sir Squire Bancroft appointed Mr. Haviland to the post of Instructor of Elocution at the Academy of Dramatic Art. Mr. Haviland was educated in perhaps the best of all Shakespearean schools, that of Sir Henry Irving, whom he joined to "carry a banner" in 1883, and with whom he remained for twelve years, working his way slowly but surely from the bottom rung of the ladder of Irving's répertoire to the topmost step, his last appearances with his old chief being as Merlin in King Arthur and the Fool in King Lear. A great deal of Mr. Haviland's best work has been done south of the equator, and he has been entitled "the Irving of South Africa," which country he has visited no fewer than six times since he first went there in 1896, the year of the "Raid." Mr. Haviland was in Johannesburg during that exciting episode, and was enlisted as a special constable. A year later he was again in the Golden City, and one Sunday evening he sat next to Woolf Joel at a Jewish performance at the Gaiety Theatre. The next Monday morning the financier was shot dead in his office. During his numerous visits to South Africa Mr. Haviland has produced and played the principal parts in the following plays, amongst many others:—Othello, Hamlet, The Merchant of Venice, Romeo and Juliet, Macbeth, The Taming of the Shrew, Much Ado About Nothing, The Tempest, David Garrick, The Bells, Resurrection, Oliver Twist, The Man Who Was, Leah Kleschna, The School for Scandal, and Trilby. When Mr. Tree decided to send his unique Shakespearean répertoire company of "all star" artists on tour, he appointed Mr. Haviland "director," with the parts of Marc Antony, Malvolio, Ford, and Prospero.

In 1905 Mr. Haviland was at his wits' end to find a leading lady to accompany him to South Africa, as two artists he had been negotiating with failed him one after another. He was within a fortnight of sailing without having found the young and beautiful actress with whom he could entrust such parts as Katusha in Resurrection, Leah in Leah Kleschna, Portia, Ophelia, Lady Macbeth, and Nancy in Oliver Twist. In this dilemma Miss Edyth Latimer, then at the ripe age of twenty, applied for the engagement: it was the first time that she and her future husband had ever met, and he had only seen her act once, with Wilson Barrett in Manchester, but he was immediately struck with her winning personality and beautiful voice, backed by a strong recommendation from Mr. Ambrose Manning, who pledged himself as to her great ability. Miss Latimer was offered the engagement immediately, and the extraordinary popularity she won in South Africa during that and a subsequent tour proved the wisdom of Mr. Haviland's choice. Miss Latimer became Mrs. William Haviland in 1906. This talented lady, it is of interest to add, was the last Mercia to play to Wilson Barrett's Marcus.

A VERY successful concert was given in Her Majesty's Theatre, Dundee (kindly lent for the occasion by Mr. Robert Arthur), on Sunday evening last, in aid of the National Incorporated Waifs and Strays Association, in connection with the Barnardo Saturday Fund. An excellent programme was contributed to by Mr. Louis Karpe, manager of Her Majesty's, and included Auxetophone selections by Messrs. Paterson, Sons, and Co.

FOOTE was once walking in Paris with a conceited Frenchman, who had been boasting his country's superiority over England. Coming to the Seine, he pointed to it, saying, "Now, as to a river, you have nothing like this in London." To which Foote replied: "We had just such another lately (alluding to the Fleet-ditch), but we have filled it up, not having any use for it."

"VIA WIRELESS."

(FROM OUR NEW YORK CORRESPONDENT.)

The New York public has been trained to expect great things of Mr. Frederic Thompson, who produced the play under notice at the Liberty Theatre in this city on the 2nd inst., and up to this writing the public has never been disappointed. Luna Park, at Coney Island, and the New York Hippodrome are monumental examples of Mr. Thompson's enterprise and ingenuity. Then he gave us Brewster's Millions and Polly of the Circus, both containing big scenes to set the public talking, and now we have Via Wireless, which shows in one of its scenes the interior of a Pittsburg steel foundry, where a naval officer's invention is purposely cast in such a way that it explodes and kills half a dozen men, as the story afterwards relates; and in another the interior of the "wireless" operator's room on a Ward liner, running between New York and Porto Rico. Lieutenant Sommers, of the United States Navy, has invented a new type of marine gun, which is to be cast at the Durant Steel Works in Pittsburg. George Durant, the proprietor of the works, is a typical American millionaire, "who has earned everything he owns." His daughter, Frances, who is eighteen, is in love with the Lieutenant. Edward Pinckney, the general manager and junior partner of the Durant firm, seeks to advance himself socially and financially by marrying Miss Frances. Pinckney controls the patent rights of another gun invented by one of his subordinates, which, if the Lieutenant's invention is a failure, will be foisted on the Government at a big profit to Pinckney. Accordingly, he perfects a scheme to ruin the Lieutenant's gun in the making. Hearing of the scheme, Frances makes a midnight visit to the forging-room, with the intention of informing the unsuspecting inventor. Lieutenant Sommers finds her there with Pinckney, and his unjustifiable suspicions lead to a falling out between the lovers. As they leave the works, the Lieutenant's gun is lifted from the furnace and plunged into its oil bath in view of the audience. During the preliminary test the gun explodes, killing and maiming several. The misunderstanding between the Lieutenant and Frances still existing, she promises her hand to Pinckney. In San Juan she meets the Lieutenant just as he has been ordered to proceed to Washington to explain why he should not be court-martialled for not giving proper care to the casting of his gun. Lieutenant Sommers, at the invitation of Miss Durant, returns to the States on board of her yacht with a Secret Service agent, who is investigating the case. During a storm the yacht runs on a reef, and is rapidly going to pieces, when aid comes from a passing steamer, the appeals for assistance being made by means of wireless telegraphy. In this scene the storm effect of Brewster's Millions is outdone. A poker game has been in progress among the hands on the steamship, when suddenly the "wireless" apparatus begins to flash out messages of distress above the howling and tumult of the storm. Thanks to the heroism of Lieutenant Sommers, the unfortunates are rescued, although the ship pitches and rolls, and everything seems to be against them. The scene on the opening night sent a thrill of excitement through the audience, and provoked an outburst of applause which lasted for several minutes. In the last act Pinckney's scheme is laid bare, the naval lieutenant wins back his reputation and his sweetheart, and Pinckney makes his exit in the custody of the Secret Service officer.

The play was admirably acted, and the performance was a complete success for all concerned. Among those who contributed to this happy result were Mr. Edwin Arden as Lieutenant Sommers, Miss Vera McCord as Frances Durant, Mr. Joseph Kaufman as Harling, the "wireless" operator, Mr. Robert McWade as George Durant, the ironmaster, and Mr. Frank Monroe as Bradley, the Secret Service man. Numerous other characters were represented, the cast comprising twenty-four persons.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

On Wednesday evening the students of the Royal College of Music gave an interesting concert, which attracted a large audience. In Beethoven's Quartet for Strings in G major, op. No. 2, played by Mr. Thomas Peatfield, Miss Amy R. Rydings, Miss Sybil Maturin, and Mr. Cedric Sharpe, the beautiful second movement, Adagio cantabile, Tempo Primon, was admirably rendered. Although the Duo Concertant for Piano and Clarionet is not a particularly interesting work of Weber, it was most skilfully performed by Mr. Ioan Powell and Mr. Clifford Foster, who were warmly applauded at the close. A very cleverly-played piano solo, Rhapsody in G minor (E. Dohnanyi), by Mr. A. E. Ouseley Norman, was another pleasing and attractive feature in Wednesday's concert. Miss Dora Arnell, who has a beautiful mezzo-soprano voice, was heard to great advantage in two difficult songs of R. Strauss, "Das Rosenband" and "Heimliche Aufforderung," receiving a most enthusiastic recall. The other vocalists were Miss Ethel Richardson, who sang Mozart's air, "Dein bin ich" (Re Pastore), with a well-played violin obbligato by Miss Marjorie K. Beer, and Miss Marjorie Hopcraft, who gave two songs of Coleridge-Taylor, "When I am dead, dearest," and "Unmindful of the roses," with much ability. It is somewhat a pity at these interesting concerts that fine quartets or trios are not occasionally sung, as they would be a capital means of utilising the no doubt fine voices of those modest and retiring male vocalists of the College, while they would also be attractive items in the programme. The concert on Wednesday evening concluded with an excellent performance of Brahms's Quartet for Piano and Strings in A major, the executants being Mr. William Murdoch, Miss Esther Capel-Cure, Miss Sybil Maturin, and Mr. Felix Salmond. Miss Alice Cotton, Miss Constance Stockbridge, and Miss Alice Tuckfield were the accompanists.

THE programme of the massed bands of Saturday last at the Alexandra Palace was an enticing one. The bands consisted of H.M. Coldstream Guards, full strength—conductor, Dr. Mackenzie Rogan, M.V.O., Hon. R.A.M.; H.M. Royal Horse Guards, Blues—conductor, Mr. Manuel Bilton; H.M. Scots Guards—conductor, Mr. F. W. Wood; the pipers of Scots Guards; drums and fifes of 2nd Coldstream and 2nd Grenadier Guards. The grand overture "Solennelle" (1812), with the usual pyrotechnic effects by Messrs. James Pain and Son, met with the same enthusiastic reception as on former occasions. Jullien's "British Army Quadrilles" was another popular item. Miss Violet Ludlow and Miss Marie Yelland opened the proceedings by the former singing the first verse of "God save the King" and the latter the second, the audience, massed bands, organs, drums, &c., being responsible for the third. The vocal numbers chosen by these ladies were all rendered with excellent taste. Mr. Edwin Goodship, the secretary and manager, wired to Sandringham wishing many happy returns of the day from the immense audience to His Majesty the King, who, through Lord Knollys, likewise replied by telegram.

THE selection from Mr. Coleridge Taylor's Faust music, now being played in Mr. Tree's production at His Majesty's Theatre, is shortly to be published as a pianoforte solo by Messrs. Boosey and Co. The song, "A King there lived in Thule," used in the same production, is also in course of issue by the same firm.

"THE WORLD AND HIS WIFE."

(FROM OUR NEW YORK CORRESPONDENT.)

Mr. William Faversham, who has been absent from the New York stage for a year or two, made his first appearance as an actor-manager in the play under notice, and complete success attended his return to the metropolis. Mr. Faversham has provided himself with a strong play and a fine company, and his season at Daly's has begun most auspiciously. With Mr. Faversham are Miss Julie Opp (Mrs. Faversham), Mr. H. Cooper Cliffe, Mr. Charles Harbury, Miss Olive Oliver, Mr. Morton Selten, Mr. Harry Redding and Mr. Lionel Belmore. The all-round excellence of the performance given by these experienced players was suggestive of the old days when a permanent stock company occupied the stage of this theatre and their representations were held up as examples for all other companies to follow. Mr. Faversham's announcements seem to promise a revival of these conditions during his tenure of Daly's Theatre, and what he has accomplished at the outset is a very good earnest of his endeavour.

The Spanish title of the play is El Gran Galeoto, and the story is as follows:—Don Julian, a rich banker of Madrid, and his wife, Teodora, have in their luxurious household Don Ernesto, a true friend to both. The gossips of Madrid misconstrue this friendship, and assert that Don Julian is a complaisant husband. The three friends laugh at the calumny, but the seed of doubt is sown. It is nourished by Don Severo, Julian's brother, a man of the world, proud of the family name, jealous of the reputation of his family. Don Ernesto's political rival, who has been instrumental in spreading ugly stories, forces the issue in a public place. The result is to be a duel between the two men. The husband hears of it, and naturally asserts that it is his place and no other man's to defend his wife's name. Consequently, it is Don Julian who faces the calumniator's sword in a studio adjoining the young man's apartments. And he comes forth, badly wounded, to discover his wife in Don Ernesto's chambers, whither she has come misled by the belief that he and her husband have had a violent quarrel. In view of what appears to be unquestionable evidence of their duplicity, Don Julian loses faith in both. He is to see them once more, and only once, after Don Ernesto has killed the man who caused the trouble and come to Don Julian's house in the hope of convincing him that he—Don Ernesto—and Teodora are innocent. But first Don Ernesto will see Teodora. When he does see her she orders him to go. The brother enters and insults him. Don Julian comes in, denounces Don Ernesto and Teodora, and retires. Don Severo orders Don Ernesto from the house. The wife tells him to stay—it is her house. But Don Severo points to the adjoining room and tells her that he is the master. She glances into her husband's chamber, and turns away pallid and trembling: Don Julian is dead. Then it is that Don Ernesto asserts himself. In an impassioned speech he arraigns Don Severo and the world, which has forced him and the wife of his friend into each other's arms. They have never sinned, but now he declares his love for her, and bears her off to share his life. "Love, honour, happiness, all gone!" he cries. "You and your kind have given her to me."

Quick in action and direct in the telling, the dramatic intensity of the play kept the audience closely interested until the end. Mr. Faversham was at his best as Don Ernesto, and Mr. Cooper Cliffe was admirable as the sacrificed husband, Don Julian. Miss Opp as Dona Teodora acted the earlier scenes with much charm and the emotional passages with genuine feeling; Mr. Selten appeared as Captain Beaulieu, an old attaché of the British Embassy, and did well; Mr. Harbury's Don Severo was a capital representation; and the other members of the company did full justice to their respective rôles. The audience was demonstrative in its approval.

DEATH OF FREDERIC TOPHAM.

With deep regret we record the death of Mr. Frederic Topham, which occurred suddenly on Tuesday night. Mr. Topham suffered from a weak heart due to a bad attack of rheumatic fever as a boy, and latterly had to be wheeled to his office in Bedford-street in a Bath-chair. As late as the afternoon preceding his death he was engaged at business. He retired to bed at nine o'clock, but woke at eleven, and passed away peacefully in his wife's arms. Born in the Isle of Wight in 1858, Mr. Topham began work in a bank. After some experience as an amateur he obtained a professional engagement, and made his first appearance on the stage in 1887. His record comprises a variety of parts, mostly Shakespearean, including Peter, Apothecary, and Capulet in Romeo and Juliet, Dromio and Pinch in The Comedy of Errors, Antonio and Verges in Much Ado About Nothing, Shallow, Slender, and Sir Hugh Evans in The Merry Wives of Windsor, Fabian and Sir Andrew in Twelfth Night, Polonius and Osric in Hamlet, Gonzalo and Stephano in The Tempest, Hardcastle in She Stoops to Conquer, Sly and Vincentio in Taming of the Shrew, and Launcelot in The Merchant of Venice. For some years past Mr. Topham had been manager of Mr. Ben Greet's academy in Bedford-street, where many pupils have had the benefit of his valuable tuition. He was a strong supporter of the Actors' Association, and was a familiar figure at the performances by the Play Actors, of whose council he was chairman. Mr. Topham leaves a wife and three children (two sons and one daughter), to whom we extend our sincere sympathy. The funeral took place yesterday morning at Brompton Cemetery. All the children of the deceased being abroad, Mrs. Topham was the only representative of the family present. There were also at the grave Mr. and Mrs. Scott, Mr. and Mrs. Shad Frost, Miss Dora Hole, and Mr. and Mrs. J. Bannister Howard. Wreaths were sent by Mr. Ben Greet, Mr. and Mrs. J. Bannister Howard, Mr. and Mrs. Bruce Atkey, Mr. and Mrs. Shad Frost, Mr Ernest Russell, Miss Dorothy Fane, Mr. and Mrs. Wright, Mrs. Malchy, Mrs. Brown, the Pupils of the Ben Greet Academy, Mrs. Pitcher, Mrs. Barrett, Miss Dora Hole, Dr. and Mrs. Kean, the Play Actors, Mrs. Scott, Mr. and Mrs. H. Vigers, Mr. Read, and the Fortitude Lodge of Freemasons, No. 12.

WHILST Garrick was one night performing the part of Hamlet, and when he was arrived at one of the most affecting scenes in that tragedy—the audience all mute attention—when even a pin might have been heard falling to the ground—all at once, to the astonishment of the spectators, Garrick was seen to burst out into a violent fit of laughter, and run suddenly off the stage: in a moment all the players followed his example. The audience, amazed at the strangeness of his conduct, cast their eyes around every corner of the house, when they immediately discovered the cause of Garrick's merriment. A jolly round-faced butcher was seated in the front row of the pit, wiping his bald pate, from which the sweat flowed in copious streams: his sagacious mastiff, no doubt eager to enjoy, as well as his master, the admirable performance of the prince of tragedians, had placed his fore-feet upon the front rail of the orchestra, and was looking eagerly upon the stage, his grave phiz dignified by his master's full-bottomed wig. The audience found it impossible to retain their gravity at this ludicrous sight; the loudest peals of laughter burst from the pit, the boxes, and the galleries; and it was a great while ere the performers could again resume that gravity necessary for performing a tragedy so deeply interesting.

LONDON & SUBURBAN THEATRES.

KING'S THEATRE, HAMMERSMITH.

On Monday, Nov. 9, the Musical Comedy entitled
"THE GIRLS OF GOTTENBERG."

A large audience crowded the King's on Monday evening to greet The Girls of Gottenberg, and a bright and lively host of young ladies they proved to be, quite to the satisfaction of patrons in front. Messrs. Grossmith and Berman's comedy is an amusing affair, and the manner in which the Blue Hussars obtain their transference from Rottenberg to Gottenberg—where the girls are—placed the audience on good terms very early in the play. The music of Messrs. Ivan Caryll and Lionel Monckton, though unpretentious, is in places tuneful, and the lyrics of Messrs. Adrian Ross and Basil Hood certainly deserve honourable mention. Most of the fun is provided by Mr. Bertie Wright, who in the character of Max Moddelkopf works with unbounded energy and succeeds in inducing hearty laughter at his comical efforts. An extremely able performance of Otto is given by Mr. Tom Shelford, whose dude-like style and dress evoke applause. Mr. Howard Cridland obtains praise as Sergeant Brittl Bottl, and Mr. Hugh Henson renders Albrecht, the Captain of Dragoons, very cleverly. Mr. Rudd Allen is a meritorious Margrave of Saxe-Nierstein, and Colonel Finkhausen is played—as a German commander is popularly supposed to be—with the necessary brusqueness. Mr. Morgan Rickards is a stolid Burgomaster, and Mr. Tom Squire is good as Adolph the Town Clerk. Mr. Edwin Stanley is a characteristic Kannenbier the innkeeper, and Mr. James Cook renders good service as the policeman. Miss Ellaline Thorne delights everyone by a dashing performance of Mitzi, in which her singing is altogether charming. As the "only girl in Rottenberg" Miss Susie Beardon is bound to be a success, but she also deserves it. Miss May Marshall as Clementine is a clever comedienne, and her flirtations with Max are highly diverting. Elsa is vivaciously represented by Miss Annie Grey, and Miss Ruby Carter dances gracefully as the maid to Elsa. The chorus is well trained and acts excellently, and the orchestra is ably directed by Mr. Otto Manns.

THE MARLBOROUGH.

On Monday, Nov. 9, Oscar Asche, Lily Brayton, and company.

The management has again secured the services of Mr. Oscar Asche and Miss Lily Brayton in a capital repértoire of plays this week, and a very hearty reception was accorded them on Monday when they presented The Taming of the Shrew. This is the third visit of these talented artists here this year, and the second occasion on which The Taming of the Shrew has been staged, and, judging by the heartiness of the reception, it is not wanting in popularity. The stirring performance of all concerned riveted attention from start to finish. Mr. Asche repeated his vigorous performance of Petruchio in his accustomed masterly fashion, and Miss Brayton handled the rôle of Katherine with all her customary skill. The piece was repeated on Wednesday and Thursday evenings, and will be presented again to-night. On Tuesday Mr. Frank Stayton's comedy of the Middle Ages, in four acts, entitled The Two Pins, was given to a full house. It is a bright, sparkling, and charmingly picturesque play, and is magnificently mounted. The acting throughout is most artistic, calling forth hearty and well-merited applause, the curtain having to be raised several times at the conclusion of each act. The beautiful stage pictures have been specially painted by Joseph Harker, and include the Battlements of Valma Castle, the Great Hall of Knoden Castle, and an exceptionally fine sylvan scene, the Woods at Valma. To Mr. Alfred Wigley's admirable stage-management we should like to bear tribute. Strength and artistic resource are the prominent features of Mr. Asche's performance of the overbearing Phillip, which stands out as a bold and virile portrait of a domineering lord of the Middle Ages. Excellent, too, is the Rudolph of Mr. G. Kay Souper, whose lines are spoken with an ease and appreciation of his rôle born of sound and varied experience. Mr. Kay Souper's performance was justly appreciated by the large audience of Tuesday night. Excellent likewise in make-up and deportment was Mr. Henry Kilts as Baron Gruntendell, who caused much merriment with reminiscences of his prowess with the sword in the Holy Land. The part suited him admirably. Mr. Tripp Edgar also rendered good service as Cyril, and was largely responsible for the humorous element. Messrs. Reginald Davis (Conrad), Caleb Porter (Detrichstein), A. V. Bramble (Gregory), J. Fritz Russell (Karl), G. Roberts (Wilhelm), and Evan Brooke (Servant at Knoden) very ably filled their respective parts, nor must we forget Mr. Herbert Grimwood, who gave a good interpretation of the Messenger from Knoden. Miss Lily Brayton's assumption of Elsa is very fine. Momentary reflection is needed only to realise the disastrous effect on the play were the part but weakly filled. Thanks to Miss Brayton's splendid conception of the part, the play gains in interest, and this clever artist must have felt that her work received warm appreciation at the hands of her audience. Miss Muriel Ashwynne gives a very commendable interpretation of Rosalie, and Mr. Henry Frankiss capably plays the part of Francis, the jester, acquitting himself with distinction, both with his acting and singing. Mr. B. A. Meyer is the general-manager, and to Mr. Ernest Charles Gittings are entrusted the duties of acting-manager. Othello was presented at the Thursday matinée and last Friday night.

CORONET THEATRE.

"THE SCHOOL FOR SCANDAL."

On Lord Mayor's Show Day, which is synonymous with the celebration of the King's Birthday, Mr. Edward Compton and his justly celebrated Compton comedy company started their week's season at the Coronet with Sheridan's evergreen comedy, The School for Scandal. She Stoops to Conquer, The Rivals, A Reformed Rake, Davy Garrick, and A Desperate Lover are among the pieces which form the week's répertoire. Monday night's was the 1,039th performance by Mr. Edward Compton of the part of the reckless Charles Surface. It is a fine part, full of gaiety and spontaneous ebullitions of good spirits and frolic, and Mr. Edward Compton avails himself to the full of his opportunities, his rendition of the famous ditty "Here's to the maiden" being capitally given, and indeed the scene of the auction of the pictures is quite one of the best in the piece. Miss Viola Compton does excellently well as Lady Teazle, her wit and innocent raillery, her fervent desire to be in the fashion, and eventually her contrition and repentance are most agreeably and naturally portrayed, and altogether she makes "a palpable hit" in the part. Mr. Henry Crocker's performance as Sir Peter Teazle is replete with humour and perspicuity, and is a well-balanced, well-matured bit of character acting. Mr. Philip Gordon, as the genial and forgiving uncle, Sir Oliver Surface, excels in the part, which suits him to a nicety. Mr. Henry Worrall handles the difficult part of the hypocritical Joseph very deftly, indicating his fascinations as well as his foibles. Mr. Wallace Johnston very cleverly doubles the parts of Crabtree and old Moses, the Israelitish moneylender, and Mr. Ivan Leslie is amusingly absurd as his precious nephew, Sir Benjamin Backbite. Mr. J. W. Austin gives a brief but pleasing portraiture of Galeas, and Mr. Neville Clifford is good as Charles's valet, Trip. Miss Kathleen Leigh makes a pretty and consistent Lady Sneerwell, and Miss Marie Hassell is exceedingly good as Mrs. Candour, who points the moral of the character in no uncertain fashion. Miss Constance Merton is duly meek and insipid as the ward Maria, and all the other parts, including the Rowley of Mr. Lawrence Meade, are well done. The minuet at the end of Act. 1 is a pleasing feature of the entertainment. Mr. Henry Crocker is stage manager and Mr. Graham Morrison business manager for Mr. Compton.

THE KENNINGTON.

On Monday, Nov. 9, the Musical Play, entitled
"THE GAY GORDONS."

Mr. Seymour Hicks and his charming wife are paying a welcome visit to Kennington Theatre this week in The Gay Gordons, one of the merriest of musical comedies, and the place they hold in the affections of the playgoing public has been amply demonstrated by overflowing and enthusiastic houses nightly. Mr. H. B. Brandreth, the astute acting-manager at Kennington, has not had a seat vacant from Monday onwards, and the house would have had to be of much larger capacity to accommodate all who sought admission. The Gay Gordons is a brilliant and sparkling production, overflowing with humour, containing many tuneful melodies, and abounding in bright and picturesque situations. The fame of the principals is too widespread to need lengthy reference, but Mr. Hicks is not content with his own versatile genius and the delightful grace and vivacity of his wife to make the piece a success. He has gathered round him a company of sterling merit, he has dressed and mounted the play on a lavish scale, and he has a rattling good chorus. Everything, therefore, goes with a swing throughout, and on Monday curtain-calls were numerous. As Peggy Quainton, Miss Ellaline Terriss scored a huge triumph with her two songs, "Humpty and Tumpty" and "Everyone likes me up in London," and as for the rest, she looked as lovely and acted as cleverly as ever. Mr. Hicks was at his best as Angus Græme—frolicsome, humorous, smart—and captivated everybody. Mr. Johnny Danvers was exceedingly good as the quaint old showman, Nervy Nat; and Miss Sidney Fairbrother gave a remarkably effective study of the part of the showman's wife. Mr. Johnny Carroll displayed great gifts of comedy in the rôle of the showman's son; while as Victoria, the showman's daughter, Miss Coralie Blyth was quite happily placed. It was on these four, after Mr. Hicks and Miss Terriss, that the burden of the play fell, and they proved to be an ideal combination for musical comedy. Mr. E. Sugg was a dignified Andrew Quainton, the affectionate father of the lovable, but headstrong, Peggy; and Miss Maud Milton was an admirable foster mother to Angus Græme. Mr. Lawrence Caird sketched the part of Corporal John Smith with considerable ability; and Mr. Will Bishop was clever as Jack McPhrisky. As Lady Millicent and Lady Græme respectively Miss Katie Butler and Miss Rosie Chesney were attractive figures, and were supported by a bevy of other beautiful girls. The five members of the peerage were adequately impersonated by Messrs. H. Ulph, M. Florance, E. D. Gibson, H. Walter, and A. Metcalfe; while Mr. J. C. Buckstone was entrusted with the interesting part of Archibald Speedy, the excitable lawyer. Miss Nell Carter was an excellent Mary McLeod. There were gay Gordons galore in all their military glory, and nothing was wanting to keep the entertainment up to the high level of the Hicks-Terriss standard—nothing perhaps except the pet dog of the company, Brandy, who was lost on Saturday while being escorted from Notting Hill, and has not yet been recovered. He was safely understudied on Monday, and still retains his place in the pretty souvenir of The Gay Gordons, which Miss Betty Hicks is credited with having prepared.

BRIXTON THEATRE.

"THE BELLE OF THE BALL."

This new musical play, which only a few weeks ago was seen at the Crown Theatre, Peckham, reached here on Monday evening, and received a hearty welcome. Miss Violet Osmund has a smart company to interpret the play, which is produced under the experienced direction of Mr. Alexander Loftus. Mr. Robert Hyett scores as the Squire, Sir Francis Lake; in the character of Timothy Timkins Mr. Johnnie Schofield causes roars of laughter; Mr. Llewellyn C. Hughes is very amusing as Bobbie Fletcher; and Mr. Chas. Adeson is good as Farmer Jones. Mr. W. E. Chewd deserves praise for his impersonation of James Foster; Miss Florence Somers makes a delightful belle of the ball as Poppy; and Miss Flora Morris as Queenie Trevor is to be highly commended. Miss Rosie Wade is an engaging Red Riding Hood, and Miss Mary Hawthorne a pretty San Toi, both ladies dancing gracefully. Miss Ethel Bertram is most diverting as Alice; and Miss Corona L'Estrange successful as Mary. A powerful orchestra and chorus do good work under the control of Mr. J. D. Rogers. The dresses and appointments are gorgeous, and special mention must be made of the set of pretty miniature ponies.

GRAND, FULHAM.

On Monday, Nov. 9, the Play in Four Acts (founded on Mrs. Henry Wood's novel), entitled
"EAST LYNNE."

Mr. W. W. Kelly's company is playing at Fulham in a new version of East Lynne, by Edmund Gurney. The new version differs in many respects from the more familiar ones, and appearances would indicate that it has yet to demonstrate its superiority to its predecessors. Mr. Fred Harker is an excellent representative of Archibald Carlyle—very much more human than some of those we have seen. Mr. W. H. Garbois plays the villain Levison rather on conventional lines. Mr. Richard Nugent is well suited to the comic part of Murty O'Flynn, and extracts much laughter from it. Mr. M. Talbot plays with dignity as Lord Mounsevern, and Mr. William Lowe does well as Justice Hare. Mr. Byron Pedley is well in the piece as Lawyer Dill. Miss Josephine Gwynne is satisfactory as Barbara Hare. Miss Sophy Shenton scores as Cornelia Carlyle, a lady with a most uncompromising tongue. Miss Guinevere Shilton shows some power as Affy (and Joyce) Halijohn, and Miss Doris Denville takes the difficult part of Willie Carlyle with success. Miss Beth Elliott does not appear to have been given much scope for displaying her dramatic powers in the earlier scenes, and in fact the second act went very sedately, but the later ones were an improvement. The piece is well staged and dressed.

DALSTON THEATRE.

"THE BELLE OF MAYFAIR."

The members of Mr. Milton Bode's company, presenting this week at the Dalston Theatre the musical comedy entitled The Belle of Mayfair, are meeting with a cordial reception. The music of the piece, for which Mr. Leslie Stuart is responsible, is, at times, particularly tuneful, and the augmented orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Frank Seddon, accompany the vocalists and the performance generally with an amount of efficiency which helps towards the complete success of the production. Mr. Percy Yorke puts a lot of go into the part of the Earl of Mount Highgate, his rendering of the song "A military man" being particularly noteworthy both for the energy displayed and for the dancing which is introduced. Mr. Edward Hugonnet plays a popular part as the Hon. Raymond Finchley, and has the advantage of some excellent scenes with Miss Florence Imeson, who as Julia Chaldicott successfully assists him in several musical numbers, prominent among them being the duet entitled "To-morrow." Mr. Harry Parker is responsible for a good deal of the fun of the piece as Sir John Chaldicott. He keeps the ball of mirth continually rolling, and the song, mostly topical, called "In Skyland," goes as well as ever. Miss Nellie Cozens is excellent as Lady Chaldicott, as is also Miss Paula Fernau as the Countess of Highgate. Miss Agnes Tandy scores a decided success as Princess Carl; her stage presence is admirable and her singing acceptable. Pincott, Julia Chaldicott's maid, has a fascinating representative in Miss Blanche Astley, who is the very embodiment of vivacity, and is a graceful dancer. Her song about "Bells" goes well. Miss Aurelie De Loriere as Lady Rosaline Rookesley and the Gibson Girl creates a favourable impression. Miss Nan Holmes as Lady Violet Gussop and Miss Millie Graham as Sophie are interesting. Mr. Lawrence Wensley is a great favourite as Hugh Meredith, and his song in praise of the glories of youth is evidently much appreciated; Mr. Laurie Lisle is excellent as Comte de Perrier; and Mr. G. McCloskie as Dr. Marmaduke Lawrence and Mr. H. Brown as Captain Theobald are seen to advantage. Messrs. Oscar Cooke, L. Wigley, F. Tennant, and L. Buckland are also in the cast. It should be added that the quartette "Come to St. George's" takes as well as ever.

GREENWICH THEATRE.

"THE KING OF CRIME."

Mr. Henry Battersby has engaged a capital company to represent this powerful drama, which has drawn excellent houses. Mr. F. B. Woulfe gives a forcible and clever impersonation of Ronjarre, the King of Crime, and by his fine elocution scores a success. Mr. William Miller furnishes a graphic delineation of the old miser Grandelu; Mr. Claude Aymond acts well as Simon, Mr. William Melvyn is good as Louis Mascoret, Mr. Sam Wilkinson is an amusing Mick Maloney, Mr. William Collins is praiseworthy as M. Folgat, and Mr. Lionel Levere is an effective Pergignan; Mr. William Hilton is a competent Jaberet, Mr. E. Morris and Mr. Cecil Stuart are well suited to the parts of Bordogne and Baptiste. The Hag, Mére Crouchard, is safe in the hands of Miss Agnese D'Aragon; Miss Nance Battersby is a charming Mathildé Handrey, Miss Edith Loraine is a vivacious Clarisse, Miss Lillie Lawrence is commendable as Mme. Mouriet, Miss Grace Evelyn is a smart Mimie Patenlair, and Miss Mildred Eversleigh plays Henriette with sympathetic womanliness and charm.

NEW LYRIC, HAMMERSMITH.

On Monday, Nov. 9, the Drama, by James Willard, entitled
"THE GIRL WITH THE ANGEL FACE."

This new and quite original drama on the "Druce" mystery idea is being toured by Messrs. Dottridge, Longden, and Willard with great success, and its visit to the Lyric this week is drawing excellent business. Mr. H. Naylor Grimson as Thomas Wentworth acts with good effect; as Stephen Arkwright Mr. Austin Mortimer is particularly capable; Mr. Arthur Gilroy makes a satisfactory lawyer as Mark Fenning; Mr. Fred G. Evison gives an excellent study of Jasper Death; Mr. J. L. Mann does well as Martin Flood; as the Rev. Gordon Cross Mr. Dobell Lyle is a typical young parson; and Mr. Henry Lee contributes a clever character study of James Govett. In the title-rôle, Miss Florrie Green plays with remarkable success. For so young an actress to essay a part like Angel Leigh must require much pluck, and Miss Green has proved herself a young lady of much ability. Miss Mildred Carr is really excellent as Mollie Maitland, and as Ena Wentworth Miss Phyllis Dailley plays sympathetically. Miss Winifred Delevanti as Nellie does clever work. All the scenic effects were built and painted at the Lyric studio, and the highest praise is merited by the staging of the piece.

THE CROWN, PECKHAM.

"THE DAIRYMAIDS."

We have a great attraction here this week in a return visit of Mr. Robert Courtneidge's clever company in the delightful musical piece The Dairymaids. Miss Clare Marsden is extremely successful as Peggy; she looks very fascinating, and renders her various musical numbers with great ability, "The Sandow Girl" and "Hello! Little Stranger!" being especially notable. Miss Clarice Lockstone scores well as Winifred, and sings very sweetly an interpolated song, "Little Boy Blue." Mr. Nelson Keys makes a dapper little naval officer as Sam Brudenell, singing well and dancing neatly. Mr. Johnny Osborne is the life and soul of the piece as the sailor Joe Mivens. His comicalities excite roars of laughter, and he executes some very agile dancing. Mr. John A. Warden is capital as the rollicking Irish Doctor O'Byrne; and Mr. A. Wykes Ashdowne does well as Lieut. Frank Meredith. Miss Gladys Silvani presents a capital character-sketch as Eliza; and Miss Mabel Younge is a most aristocratic Lady Brudenell. Miss Madge Avery is good as the austere Miss Penelope Pyechase. The chorus is large and efficient, and the bright music, pretty girls, and attractive scenery all cause the production to be received with the utmost cordiality. Mr. Percy J. Purdey is the general-manager for the company, and the orchestra is under the bâton of Mr. Albert Bartlett.

THE SHAKESPEARE.

On Monday, Nov. 10, the Play in Four Acts, by Walter Melville, entitled,
"THE GIRL WHO WRECKED HIS HOME."

The Girl Who Wrecked His Home was successfully presented here on Monday by Mr. Walter Melville's company. Although there is nothing new or startling about the plot, Mr. Melville strikes a note of homeliness without undue striving after effect. Miss Louise Hampton is responsible for a powerful impersonation of the misguided Bertha Marshall. Miss Hampton gives a touching delineation of the unhappy girl who is tempted from home, portraying the emotions of the character with great judgment, and fully eliciting the sympathies of the audience. An extreme contrast is the adventuress Val Raymond, presented in a sufficiently abandoned manner by Miss Georgie de Lara. Miss Lulu Bowes is responsible for a charmingly unaffected assumption of Winifred Marshall, and Miss Alys Eden is effective as Lottie Primrose. The love scenes of Miss Ida Thompson as little Winnie Marshall, and Master Dick Evans as Master Billy Stevenson are prettily acted, and Miss Lily Belding does all that is possible in the part of Sally Thompson. Mr. Fred Goddard scores a decided success in the rôle of Jack Marshall, and acts throughout with a dignity and force that carry conviction. Mr. Paul Barry Lewers depicts with due effect the callous nature of the scheming Leonard Kenyon, and acquits himself with credit. Mr. Norman B. Cannon renders good support as William Stevenson, and Mr. Harry Arnold does well as Bertie Clements. Mr. Herbert Goddard is to be congratulated on his excellent rendering of the part of Henry Stevenson, a brewer, and Mr. Geo. P. Lester is satisfactory as the detective Brockbank. Mr. Francis Hope is responsible for much humour in his presentation of Tommy Biffin, and Mr. Will E. Clements plays well in the rôle of Josh Crockett. The scenery and effects are up to the high level of excellence usual with Mr. Melville's productions.

ARTILLERY THEATRE, WOOLWICH.

"THE SILVER KING."

Mr. Henry Arthur Jones's ever-successful and highly attractive drama The Silver King still continues its prosperous career, and under the generalship of Messrs. G. M. Polini and Austin Melford loses none of its aforetime interesting qualities. The mounting of the play leaves nothing to be desired, and the numerous members of a long cast are well placed. Mr. Fred D. Davis supplies a clever study of that unfortunate individual Wilfred Denver, and deserves praise for an impressive rendering. Miss Edyth Goodall gives a good delineation of the character of Nellie Denver, finely touched with pathos. Daniel Jaikes is in the experienced hands of Mr. Edward J. George, who displays much ability. Mr. E. Stanton-Sharp infuses much dramatic effect into the part of Captain Herbert Skinner; Henry Crocket is capably undertaken by Mr. George Belmore; Mr. Arthur Wright gives a good account of himself as Elijah Coombe; Mr. Arthur H. Rooke maintains the character of Geoffrey Ware with ability; Mr. E. Stidwell as Samuel Baxter merits commendation; Miss Kathleen Maude is successful as Olive Skinner; and Miss Louie Hall scores in the part of Tabitha Durden. The remaining members of the cast do well in their respective rôles.

CRYSTAL PALACE THEATRE.

"THE DANDY FIFTH."

Mr. Clarence C. Corri presented his own successful and popular military comic opera to good houses here this week, and himself wielded the conductor's bâton at each performance. As the book of this play is by Mr. G. R. Sims, it goes without saying that there is a plot and plenty of witty dialogue and good lyrics.

Mr. Percy Baverstock gave a most spirited rendering of the very irascible Colonel of the regiment from which the opera takes its name. In the part of the hero, Dick Darville, as played by Mr. J. Edward Fraser, became a dashing blade of a cavalryman, with plenty of go and a good voice to back it up. Mr. Jack Chrichton as Private Augustus Brown, and Mr. George Beverley as Sergt.-Major Milligan kept the house in fits of laughter from start to finish.

Miss Pauline Hague, who has played the part of Kate Lorrimer, the merry madcap, over 1,000 times, makes a sweet heroine, singing with great feeling the numbers which fell to her share, and was most helpful to the success of the production. Miss Nora Morra as Polly, a very cheerful and irresponsible person, was excellent in all she undertook, more especially when sharing her mirthful endeavours with Mr. Jack Chrichton. Mrs. Von Blitzen, the Colonel's sister, was admirably portrayed by Miss Maude Nichols, and made it a thoroughly amusing part. Miss Florence Spurgeon revealed a good voice and manner as Antoinette, the maid to Kate Lorrimer. Mr. Harry Ed. Ray as Sir Victor acted well, and was a nimble dancer. Messrs. C. Bellard and J. Pierrepoint as the troopers, Jones and Robinson, played smartly and looked soldierly. In the Fancy Dress Ball scene Mesdames Sadie Thompson, Grace Desmond, and Edie Burton appeared in pretty costumes, and helped to make this part of the play bright and lively.

THE BROADWAY.

"THE PRINCE AND THE BEGGAR MAID."

Messrs. Paumier and Howard's company opened here on Monday in the Lyceum success, The Prince and the Beggar Maid, and the large audience assembled frequently testified to their satisfaction by loud and prolonged applause. The play is capitally acted and generously staged. Mr. Herbert Ford made an instant success by his forcible yet natural portrayal of Prince Olaf. Miss Annie Saker's Princess of Illyria was a finely-conceived part admirably acted. Miss Dido Drake was a charming Camio (the Beggar Maid). Miss Isla Garnet Vayne presented an excellent portrayal of the character of Viola. Master W. Beasley made a manly little Bugler. Prince Hildred of Sylvania had a capital representative in Mr. Ivan Cleveland, and the character of his brother, Michael, was in the capable hands of Mr. Graeme Campbell. Mr. Edmund Lea made an impressive Colonel Wellesley. Mr. Ivan Ewart was very good as Colonel Schwartz. Mr. Richard Lane's Lieut. Hapsburg merited praise, as did Mr. Williams's Captain Keller, and Mr. William Coates's Major Wessler. Equally good impersonations were those of Captain Ardenne by Mr. E. A. Ball and Lieut. Felsburg by Mr. Albert Carlton. A fine performance of Captain Hector was given by Mr. Lewin Mannering. Mr. Kendal Chalmers was very good as Lieut. Karl Stromberg, and the Nathan of Mr. J. E. Gardiner and the Bishop of Mr. Francis Hawley were capitally acted parts. The last-named gentleman is the capable general manager, and Mr. Chalmers the stage-manager of the company, Mr. Bertram Iles is the popular resident-manager, and Mr. Clarke Richardson the musical director of the excellent Broadway band.

THEATRE ROYAL, WOOLWICH.

On Monday, Nov. 9, the Play entitled
"THE CHRISTIAN."

A capital company, under Mr. Wentworth Croke's organisation, is presenting here this week the new version of The Christian, by Mr. Hall Caine, which is received in a very flattering manner by interested and attentive audiences, who are completely carried away by the deep emotions depicted from life and the sentimental and dramatic situations introduced in the story by the author. The play is admirably mounted and carefully portrayed. Mr. Roy Redgrave offers a very realistic (as judged by the novel) and a powerful study of the Hon. John Storm, delivering his lines with excellent effect. He keeps a firm hold of his hearers. Miss Daisy Scudamore essays the difficult character of Glory Quayle with equal success, and her acting is characterised by judicious blending of frivolity and pathos. Horatio Drake is capably undertaken by Mr. Wilfred Noy; Mr. Herbert Hewitson does ample justice to the disagreeable part of Lord Robert Ure; Mr. Fewlass Llewellyn gives a clever impersonation of Father Lamplugh; Mr. John J. Hooker produces an excellent impression as Archdeacon Wealthy; Mr. Royce Milton is good as Lord Storm; and the same may be said of Mr. Bruce Lindley as Parson Quayle. Polly Love has a talented exponent in Miss Cora Deane; Miss Florence Hunt displays much ability as Black Meg; Mrs. Harriett Russell and Mr. Fred Goodyer as Mother Kent and Bert respectively share equal honours; Miss Molly Hayden makes an effective Mrs. Callender; Miss Kitty Symons scores highly as Lady Robert Ure; and Liza is successfully impersonated by Miss Ada Rose.

BRITANNIA THEATRE.

On Monday, Nov. 9, the Melodrama, by E. Hoggan Armadale, entitled
"LONDON'S CURSE."

The patrons at this house have been greatly interested this week in the production of London's Curse, a drama that deals very strongly with drink. It is depicted in the usual able manner by the stock company engaged. The most important character is George Montgomery, played by that excellent actor Mr. Harry Tresham, a character that gives him ample opportunities. The scene where he has the delirium tremens is well played, and he is seen at his best and well deserves the applause bestowed upon him. Mr. Carter Bishop is well placed as the banker, John Redfern. Mr. Herbert Young gives an excellent interpretation of the Rev. Ernest Langton. Mr. H. Eyeland Leigh gives a realistic performance as the rascally solicitor Abraham Scroby. An excellent character study of the escaped convict was presented by Mr. C. Alan Hineson. Considerable amusement was caused by Mr. Ivan Pat Gore for his mirth-provoking interpretation of Rory Drummond. He is ably assisted by Mr. H. G. Brandon, who gives a good performance as Mussels, Scroby's clerk, and adds considerably to laughter-making. Mr. J. D. Hennessey is an ideal public-house keeper, and plays the part quite naturally. Miss Lalla Stanhope invests the character of Mabel Montgomery with a sympathetic touch which is required in this part, and receives the applause of her audience. Miss Etheyle Gordon Murray, who has not a very important character to delineate, nevertheless plays with her usual ability and success. Miss Florence Barnes deserves credit for her interpretation of Lottie Smithers. Some excellent pictures are shown on the Barrascope. The orchestra introduce some tuneful interludes during the evening, including a pretty overture composed by Mr. F. W. Hatley, the resident conductor.

THEATRE ROYAL, STRATFORD.

On Monday, Nov. 9, the Drama, by Edward Jewry,
"AN UNWEDDED WIFE."

A capital reception was accorded to Miss Ethel Van Praagh and Mr. J. Edward Whitty's company in An Unwedded Wife at the Theatre Royal on the opening night of the week, and the favourable impression the piece made on its former visit was thus fully endorsed. The piece is plentifully embellished with comedy business, which has the advantage of being directly connected with the story, and the action is briskly maintained from start to finish. As Marion, the unwedded wife, Miss Ethel Van Praagh's performance suffers nothing from long familiarity with the part, and the sympathies of the audience are enlisted throughout. Mr. George Daiper is a manly and outspoken Frank Hawthorn; and Mr. Charles Stirling portrays the blackguardly Philip Blackstone on sound lines. Mr. J. Edward Whitty as the good-hearted, free-and-easy P.C. O'Runyin, always on the spot to thwart villainy, is very entertaining and interesting; Mr. Will Casey supplies a clever delineation of Napoleon B. Bloomer; and Mr. R. Milton Bedford is a very able exponent of Christopher Lennox. Miss Jessie Gillette makes a bright and amusing Caraway Crumpet, and a word of praise is due to Little Doris for her intelligent performance as Reggie. Other parts are in capable hands, and the piece is appropriately staged.

BOROUGH THEATRE, STRATFORD.

On Monday, Nov. 9, the Drama, by Hall Caine, entitled
"THE BONDMAN."

Mr. Wentworth Croke's company in this Drury Lane success is paying a welcome return visit here this week, and on Monday night a large and appreciative audience witnessed the performance. Mr. R. Scrope Quentin is well endowed physically for the part of the rugged, unpolished, determined Jason, and his acting is forcible, virile, and convincing. As the more nurtured, ambitious Michael Sunlocks Mr. Lionel Atwill plays with fluency and ease, and looks the part well; Mr. W. H. Rotherham supplies a graphic and well-defined sketch of the clerical outcast, Father Ferrati, in addition to playing the grandfather of the first act very realistically; Mr. Alfred Fisher plays with power and expression as Governor Testa; and Mr. Fred J. Waller handles the rôle of the scheming Doctor Boni with tact and judgment. Mr. Oswald Lingard is excellent as Adam Fairbrother; Mr. George R. Austin does well as the Marshal of Police; Miss Georgina Wynter makes a very charming Greeba, and her acting is always sympathetic, agreeable, and interesting; Miss Madge Lamerton is a very natural Mrs. Fairbrother; Miss Lilian Mayne makes the most of her opportunities as Martha; Miss Emilie Mayhew plays Christian Ann appropriately; and Miss Bessie West smartly enacts Maria. The piece is exceedingly well mounted and dressed.

"THE DRAGON."

A New and Original Operetta, in One Act, Written and Composed by James M. Gallatly, and Produced at the Theatre Royal, Margate, on Monday, Nov. 9.

The Enchanter ..... Mr. John Le Hay
The Gaoler ..... Mr. Reginald Crompton
The Prince ..... Mr. Frank G. Dunn
The Princess ..... Miss Ruby Melbon

The operetta is made the vehicle for the exposition of some very tuneful and pretty music. The scene is laid at "Castle Perilous," at a time when, to quote the words of Tennyson,

"Knights sliced a red life—bubbling way
Thro' twenty folds of twisted dragon."

There seems to have been a quarrel between the Prince and Princess, the latter resenting his suggestion that his "knightly vows bid him think all damsels fair." She is immured in "Castle Perilous" by her parents, where she is guarded by the Enchanter and the Gaoler, until such time as a suitable prince shall come to claim her hand. The aspirant has, at the same time, to run the gauntlet of a fiery dragon, "Launcelot," who is the outside custodian of the castle. The Enchanter has become tired of his occupation, from which he wishes to retire, but he cannot release himself until there comes a prince bold enough to gain admission to the Princess's presence. The necromancer, therefore, resorts to strategy. The once-favoured Prince being willing to return to his lady-love, the Enchanter arranges that the dragon shall be kept in conversation with a nagging woman at the tradesmen's entrance. By this device the Prince succeeds in gaining admission to the Princess's apartments. But the necromancer's scheme nearly fails, because the wooer reiterates in her presence that his knightly vows bid him think all damsels fair, and he narrowly escapes again being sent from her presence. There is, however, a reconciliation, and the usual happy ending.

Of the many numbers, all of them excellent, premier honours must be given to the Princess's appeal to the gaoler, "I deign to kneel, good gaoler, see, on bended knee." Another was the unaccompanied madrigal, "Here's a tale of vain endeavour," and again the Prince's song, "Though in your indignant eyes." Miss Melbon sang sweetly and acted delightfully throughout, and Mr. Frank Dunn was good in the tenor solos. The gaoler, perhaps unfortunately, has only one solo, which is a very good one and well sung by Mr. Reginald Crompton, an old Savoyard, who did, as might be expected, remarkably well. Mr. John Le Hay, the celebrated comedian, was the life and soul of the piece, and his humorous presentment of the Enchanter kept the house bubbling over with infectious merriment. His best effort vocally was in a song, "That people should impute to such a genial creature the motives of a brute." His interpolated business was extremely funny and his dancing capital. The operetta was personally conducted by the composer, was produced under the direction of Mr. W. W. Keene, and at the close was loudly applauded.

MR. GODFREY NUTTING'S CONCERT.

A highly successful concert was given by Mr. Godfrey Nutting of his own compositions at Æolian Hall on Thursday afternoon, Nov. 5. The programme consisted of some twenty pianoforte pieces and songs, in all of which Mr. Nutting displayed graceful and tuneful melody, while some of his songs, given for the first time, met with a most cordial reception from the large audience. Mr. Nutting was assisted by Miss Katherine Jones, Miss Eva Bevis, Miss Beatrice Eveline, and Mr. Philip Simmons. Miss Katherine Jones, who sang "With you," with organ obbligato, and "My dream," received a hearty encore; and Miss Eva Bevis, a clever pupil of Mme. Kate Flinn, also had an enthusiastic encore for her clever singing of "A Dutch lullaby" and "Stolen fruit," the latter being a very bright and effective song. Mr. Philip Simmons, who has a very pleasing tenor voice, was heard to great advantage in "Midsummer love song" and "The garden I love." In the instrumental portion of the programme Mr. Godfrey Nutting played several of his own compositions, "Romance," "Arabesque," and "Sea Pictures," for the piano with marked ability; while Miss Beatrice Eveline contributed some excellent 'cello solos by Moskowski and other composers. Mr. P. Mavon-Ibbs was the organist and accompanist.

DEATH OF VICTORIEN SARDOU.

M. Victorien Sardou, the great French dramatist, who died in Paris on Sunday morning from congestion of the lungs, was born in that city in 1831. He was intended for the medical profession, and while studying for it was in great poverty. In 1854, when he was twenty-three, his comedy La Taverne des Etudiants was accepted for production at the Odéon, but was received with hisses. His marriage to Mlle. de Brécourt gave him a footing in the dramatic world, and he was associated with the successes of Déjazet in his vaudevilles Monsieur Garat and Les Premières Armes de Figaro. In the early sixties he produced Piccolino—which has twice been used as the basis of a comic opera libretto—Les Pattes de Mouche at the Gymnase, and Nos Intimes. In 1863 his Les Diables Noirs was prohibited by the Censors. It was followed by Les Vieux Garçons and Nos Bons Villageois. In 1869 he wrote the drama Patrie, which afterwards became the basis of Paladilhe's opera, produced for the first time at the Paris Opera House in 1886. The play was revived at the Comédie-Française in 1901. Rabagas, first staged in 1872, was a political satire in support of Napoleon III. In 1873 L'Oncle Sam, of which the production at Paris was forbidden by the Censors for diplomatic reasons, on account of its references to the institutions and people of America, was presented for the first time in New York, and in the following year was put on in Paris. In 1874 the drama La Haine, which was the first of the long series of elaborately-mounted Sardou plays, was taken off after a run of three weeks. Divorçons won great popularity, Mme. Réjane creating the leading part. In 1877 Sardou was elected a member of the Académie Française. In 1882 began M. Sardou's association with Mme. Sarah Bernhardt, and Fédora was produced at the Vaudeville on Dec. 12, 1882. The series also included Théodora, La Tosca, Cléopâtre, and La Sorcière. Théodora, produced at the Porte St. Martin on Dec. 26, 1884, ran for 200 nights, Massenet providing the incidental music. In November, 1887, Madame Bernhardt returned to Paris after her tour abroad, and presented Sardou's La Tosca, which was played 125 times. Sardou's drama was used as the basis of the libretto of the opera by Puccini, which was produced at Rome in 1900, and Fédora was made the subject of the libretto of Giordano's opera of that name. In October, 1890, Mme. Bernhardt appeared at the Porte St. Martin in the title-part in Cléopâtre, by M. Moreau and M. Sardou. The piece ran until the following January. In 1891 Sardou presented Thermidor, a drama dealing with the Revolutionary period. The performance of the play was forbidden, for political reasons, after its third representation.

In October, 1893, Sardou collaborated with M. Moreau in Madame Sans-Gêne. Mme. Réjane made a great hit in the title-part. A few years later the piece was translated into English by Mr. H. B. Irving, and produced by Sir Henry Irving at the Lyceum in April, 1897. In 1899 Robespierre was specially written for the great English actor by Sardou. His comedies, Marcelle and Paméla, were more or less successful, as also was the drama Gismonda, written for Mme. Bernhardt. Spiritisme, produced at the Gymnase by the same actress in 1897, dealt with the difficult subject of occultism. In 1903 Sir Henry Irving produced a translation of the Dante of Sardou and M. Moreau, written specially for the English actor and translated by Mr. Laurence Irving. Dante was produced at Drury Lane on April 30, 1903, and ran during the whole Drury Lane season. Later dramatic productions of Sardou were La Sorcière, produced by Mme. Bernhardt at her own theatre, and L'Affaire des Poisons, the run of which was recently resumed at the Porte St. Martin with M. Coquelin as the Abbé Griffard. The piece was a great success at His Majesty's Theatre this summer.

Sardou's literary work included a novel, "La Perle Noire," and a volume entitled "Mes Plagiats," defending himself against accusations of plagiarism. M. Sardou received in 1906 the Grande Croix of the Légion d'Honneur.

The funeral took place on Wednesday. At the late dramatist's residence orations were pronounced by M. Doumergue, the Minister of Public Instruction and Fine Arts, in the name of the French Government; by M. Vandal, the Director of the French Academy; and by M. Paul Hervieu, in the name of the Society of Dramatic Authors, of which M. Sardou was an ex-president. There were present, besides the members of the French Academy, M. Clemenceau and other Ministers, General Gallifet, and M. Raymond Poincaré. The funeral cortège proceeded to the Church of St. François de Sales with a military escort. The body of M. Sardou was conveyed to Marly in the afternoon.

BRITISH EMPIRE SHAKESPEARE SOCIETY.

Princess Louise-Augusta of Schleswig-Holstein distributed, on the afternoon of the 6th inst., at the Shaftesbury Theatre, kindly lent by Mr. H. B. Irving, the prizes and certificates gained at the examinations for elocution and essay-writing held by the above society. The prize-giving was preceded by an entertainment. Mr. Shakespeare Stewart rendered Horn's "Crabbéd Age and Youth" and Sir Henry Bishop's "Bid me discourse" cleverly; Mrs. Emile Mond sang "Should he upbraid" and an old setting of the Willow Song; Mr. John E. Munro contributed Schubert's "Who is Sylvia?" and Sargent's setting of "Blow, blow, thou winter wind"; and Miss Christine D'Almayne was heard to advantage in "Sigh no more, ladies" and "It was a lover and his lass." Mr. Basil Gill and Mr. Lyn Harding gave a spirited rendering of the Quarrel scene from Julius Cæsar, Mr. Gill as Brutus and Mr. Harding as Cassius, being equally effective.

Mr. Sidney Lee, in opening the prize-giving, said the recent development of the society was largely due to the energy and resolution of Mr. Acton Bond. Mr. Henry Arthur Jones proposed a vote of thanks to the Princess Louise-Augusta. The theatrical profession, he said, owed a heavy debt to the Royal Family for the interest they took in plays and the support they gave to theatrical charities. Miss Morritt seconded the vote in a loyal speech.

Mr. J. T. Grein proposed a vote of thanks to Mr. H. B. Irving for lending the theatre. Mr. Acton Bond, in seconding the motion, referred to the help rendered to the society by Mr. H. B. Irving in the provinces. The Princess, he said, had kindly promised to be present at a performance of Twelfth Night at Bethnal Green on Thursday afternoon, Nov. 26. A development of the Reading Circle method as a preliminary to public Dramatic Readings was being made by the society in London. He hoped that there would again be a permanent Irving Theatre in London.

Mr. H. B. Irving, in returning thanks, said that he regarded acting proper as the principal part of his work. He highly commended the help given by the society to Shakespearian study in the great cities.

HINTS as to the way to prevent or cure sore throats or hoarseness, which are unusually prevalent just now, should be very valuable. That eminent throat specialist, the late Sir Morell Mackenzie, M.D., who was consulting physician to the late Emperor of Germany, always recommended patients suffering from sore throat or hoarseness to gargle with Condy's Remedial Fluid largely diluted with water, and we are able to bear personal testimony to the fact that a speedy cure attends those who follow this advice. Condy's Remedial Fluid can be obtained from all chemists and stores.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Mr. Fred Terry and all concerned gained hearty congratulations on the initial performance of Henry of Navarre, which took place at Newcastle-on-Tyne on the evening of the 5th inst. The author has been happy in his choice of a character for an actor of the arts and graces of Mr. Fred Terry for, beyond the limits of our own English heroes of history, there are few men who have been so indulgently lauded in song and story as King Henry of Navarre. The play opens with a scene at the Louvre, where is hatched a plot to draw the Huguenots to Paris on the occasion of the marriage of Marguerite de Valois and Henry of Navarre. Few but Henry himself regard the proposed union as a case in which love is to count for anything, King Charles being a cowardly party, reluctant perhaps, but conscious, to the massacre inspired by Catherine de Medici. There is a capital scene between Henry and Margot, when the affianced parties meet for the first time since childhood, and Henry convinces his betrothed, much to her surprise, that he really loves her, and she begins to realise that here is the man for whom she had hoped. The dawn of their happiness, however, is marred by a hint of the woman's complicity in the plot which is to rid France of the Huguenots for ever.

In the second act the marriage has been accomplished, and Henry, more in love with his wife than ever, learns of the devices by which the Queen-Mother hopes to compass his death, but a staunch friend is found in Ruggieri, as astrologist, by whose means Henry is able to detect the poisoned cup that is meant for him, and by an artful subterfuge he is at the same time to betray the secret of the crafty and vengeful Catherine.

A romantic intrigue is allied to the political interests of the third act, which depicts the outcome of a failure of Margot to fathom the depths of her husband's resource in circumventing his enemies; and Henry surprises the Duc de Guise, when he is bent upon dishonouring Margot. It is Henry who saves the Duc, for the King, entering the chamber to trap the Duc and rate his sister, discovers that the man in hiding in the room is none other than the devoted husband, who has been enabled at one stroke to save his wife's honour, to humiliate his enemy, and to further ingratiate himself with the King, who had always admired his manly brother-in-law. The fourth act finds the King depressed by the prophecies of Ruggieri, who foretells his death and the eventual accession of Henry to the throne of France, whilst at the same time Catherine tries to hasten the hour of the massacre. The King gives the order that every Huguenot having a white band on his arm and a white cross in his cap shall be safe—the rest must die. The idea of the massacre in the streets is realistically conveyed, and meanwhile in the Louvre there are stirring doings, Henry again having the better of his difference with Guise, and for a time, at any rate, owing his life to the trick whereby Margot makes him the unwitting wearer of the white cross. The play closes with the King's remorse as he realises the horror of the night's massacre, and Henry and Margot are at last brought together in perfect love. The end is reached effectively. Ruggieri, the astrologer, assures Henry that his star is shining brightly:—"It first shone at your birth, but never so brightly as now. Your perils are past; sire, you will be king." Margot, turning to her husband, hails him as "My King!" and Henry greeting her as "My Queen! My queen of Marguerites!" the curtain falls.

From his first appearance in the Ante-Room of the Louvre to the final scene in the apartments of his wife, Marguerite de Valois, Mr. Terry delighted his admirers by the masterly manner in which he handled his new rôle, and his Henry of Navarre may be recorded as one of his finest studies. Miss Miriam Lewes, in the absence of Miss Julia Neilson, shared with Mr. Terry the honours of the evening, and as Marguerite de Valois her charm and graceful delineation of the character was warmly appreciated. The weak and vacillating yet passionate King Charles was admirably portrayed by Mr. Malcolm Cherry; whilst Mr. A. E. Anson (Duc de Guise), Mr. Walter Edwin (De Mouhy, a Huguenot leader), and Mr. Harry F. Wright (Duc d'Anjou) sustained their respective rôles with ability. Mr. Horace Hodges as Ruggieri (an astrologer) played with his usual incisive force; and Catherine de Medici, the Queen-Mother, as interpreted by Miss Marion Sterling, was an able study. Miss Kathleen Doyle as Marie, Marguerite's maid, gave a piquant and charming personation; and other leading characters were capably filled. The fashionable audience which filled the theatre proved kindly from the first, and at the end recalled Mr. Terry again and again until he expressed his thanks.

STEINWAY HALL.

The Misses Nella Gunning, Kato van der Hoeven, and Johanna Heymann gave an afternoon concert at Steinway Hall on Wednesday, which was largely attended. In Beethoven's Trio for piano, violin, and 'cello, No. 1, in E flat major, the three ladies were associated with excellent results, the fine echerzo and lively finale being particularly well played. Miss Kato van der Hoeven gave Marcello's Sonata, G minor, for violoncello, in which her performance of the largo was most successful. Miss Johanna Heymann is a brilliant executant, but in her piano solo of Schubert's Impromptu in B flat hardly realised the poetry of that masterly work, her best efforts being the charming "Minuet" from Edward German's Merrie England Dances and Two Pieces for the Harpischord (Scarlatti). The old Italian composer Nardini was represented in the programme by his Sonata in D major for violin, played by Miss Nella Gunning with good effect, although the clever young performer produced a somewhat rough tone. In the larghetto and quaint allegretto grazioso Miss Gunning proved herself a facile executant, and was heartily applauded. Miss Kato van der Hoeven, the 'cellist, also played "Tre Giorni" (Pergolese), Minuet (Valensin), and Max Bruch's popular "Kol Nidrei," and Miss Johanna Heymann was again heard in Chopin's Nocturne, Op. 27, No. 1, and Valse, A flat major (Moszkowski). Mr. Reginald Clarke was the accompanist.

A CHAT WITH MR. W. YATES GREGORY.

"So, Mr. Gregory, you have taken over the control of Shrewsbury Theatre Royal, and purpose not only to give 'Proud Salopians' the best dramatic and variety fare available, but by bringing your long experience to bear upon the undertaking, to make the concern a sound and progressive commercial success?"

"Such is my intention if it be within the bounds of possibility to do so."

"May I ask, Mr. Gregory, having regard to your successes elsewhere, what lines you purpose going on here?"

"That depends largely upon circumstances: human life is largely a matter of environment, and experience of the world, particularly in matters theatrical, has taught me to be cautious in speculation. I am fully aware that in an old town like Shrewsbury one has to carefully consider local conservatism and provincial susceptibilities when introducing innovations; but it is my intention to periodically provide a brighter form of entertainment than the usual run of drama; in short, to please the public with bright vaudeville shows, pretty, artistic, and, above all things, clean. One of my chief ideas is to run two shows a night, which, I think, will prove cheaper and more attractive to the public while at the same time more remunerative alike to the profession and management."

"That will certainly be an innovation at Shrewsbury."

"Yes; and in my judgment, born of experience, I am convinced that it will sooner or later—sooner than later I think—prove that my opinion is the correct one. It is thus: times have changed—whether for better or worse I do not pretend to say. Problem plays do not appeal to the average public; Shakespearean and classical plays cease to attract the many; melodrama with the inevitable vicious villain, impossible hero, and hysterical heroine, have, I should imagine, almost had their day; and to cater successfully for all classes one must put on bright witty musical trifles; not fourth-rate, mind you, but the best that can be obtained upon remunerative terms, and I am convinced that such talent is available. Nay, I have elsewhere proved that such is the case: it is only a matter of judgment in selection. I have been an enterpreteur for very many years, and I am able to engage people—not necessarily acknowledged professional stars—who have sufficient talent and discrimination to give the public a bright, healthy, and up-to-date performance which they will thoroughly appreciate and willingly pay for: a light form of entertainment, chiefly perhaps song and dance, quip and crank, something that does not make folk think or weep. Life to-day is gloomy enough in all conscience: there is drama and to spare in the world, why 'tear the passion to rags' on the stage? People will come to be amused if you can give them bright and healthy shows, in proof of which I have only to recall the Gilbert and Sullivan operas. That, of course, is but an illustration of my meaning. We English are a stoical people as compared with the French, and we take our pleasures sadly, but the public in this country are beginning to appreciate lighter forms of entertainment than the plays which have been going the rounds year after year. Let me, however, say again, and most emphatically say, that while introducing this class of entertainment, it is my absolute intention that what I am responsible for putting on shall be of the cleanest, brightest, and best that it is in my power to secure."

"I am delighted to hear you say so, and I heartily wish you success."

"Now it would, I am sure, interest many readers of The Era, more particularly those who are in the profession, to know something of your career and your experiences. How long have you been connected with the theatrical profession?"

"All my life practically, and my family before me. My grandfather was for forty years acting-manager of the Theatre Royal, Birmingham; my cousin, the late Mr. Mercer H. Simpson, was lessee of that theatre, and for six years I was his acting-manager. My father was manager for Day's Concert Hall, and at that time there were but three recognised music halls in the country, the others being the Star, Liverpool, and the Scotia, Glasgow. I assisted my father in the managemnt of Day's, Birmingham. Later, I was for six years manager for Miss Ada Alexander for all the South Wales Hippodromes, and I have travelled with my own productions through the provinces, one of my most successful ventures being The Veterans, which went well in many of the principal halls. Among other concerns I am at the present time manager for Hale's Tours of the World, holding the rights in connection with the same in Ireland and the Isle of Man. These are now running at New Brighton, Belfast, and elsewhere. A new enterprise in which I am largely interested, financially and otherwise, as managing director, is the New Palace Theatre, Wrexham, now being built, which it is hoped will be completed in the early part of next year, and which will be one of the finest appointed and best equipped theatres in the provinces."

"You evidently have your time fully occupied, Mr. Gregory, but, of course, have reliable gentlemen to assist you in the management of these enterprises?"

"Yes, fortunately that is so. Mr. Thomas Baugh here is my general manager, and he has wide experience of variety entertainments.

"With regard to my latest undertaking, Shrewsbury Theatre Royal and Hippodrome, we obtained the sanction of the magistrates for certain structural improvements, and these have already been made; while I am having better electric lighting arrangements and new scenery painted.

"I understand, Mr. Gregory, that you are retaining the services, as resident-manager, of Mr. W. C. Dornton, who has been manager of Shrewsbury Theatre for five years, and who has family connections here?"

"Quite right. Mr. Dornton comes of an old theatrical family, and I have known him for nearly twenty years. We first met at the Theatre Royal, Birmingham, his father then being lessee, and the former was acting-manager. I sincerely trust that our business connection may prove mutually advantageous, and that the new venture will be permanently successful. I am determined that so far as lies in my power I shall endeavour to make it so.

"In conclusion, I will say just one word to my colleagues, the brotherhood and sisterhood of the profession. While 'business is business,' I intend to have due regard to the comfort and well-being of touring companies and variety entertainers who may be in Shrewsbury, and I shall make it my personal duty to cater adequately for their requirements."

DE QUINCEY wrote of Helen Faucit (Mrs. Theodore Martin) in 1845: "Then, suddenly—oh heavens! what a revelation of beauty!—forth stepped, walking in brightness, the most faultless of Grecian marbles, Miss Helen Faucit, as Antigone. What perfection of Athenian sculpture!—the noble figure, the lovely arms, the fluent drapery! What an unveiling of the ideal statuesque! Is it Hebe? Is it Aurora? Is it a goddess that moves before us? Perfect she is in form; perfect in attitude:

'Beautiful exceedingly,
Like a ladye from a far countrie!'

It flattered one's patriotic feelings to see this noble young countrywoman realising so exquisitely, and restoring to our imagination the noblest of Grecian girls!"

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Leicester audiences expect much from Mr. Frederick Maxwell, and on Monday evening there were two big houses, in anticipation of this author-actor's new production, Give a Man a Chance. The verdict as to the popularity of his latest venture was never in doubt, as it met with a most enthusiastic reception from all sections of the delighted audiences, thus adding another to the many successes this gifted gentleman has achieved. The story is well told and is of a thoroughly interesting nature.

The scene represents the office of the new River Saw Mills in British Columbia. Mr. Darsay, the owner, receives a visit from Joe Hooker, who is about to marry a negress (his landlady), but not enjoying the prospect of matrimony, expresses his determination to commit suicide after the ceremony. Upon this incident a strong vein of comedy is introduced. Willie (Mr. Darsay's son) arrives from Silver Falls with the news that his uncle, Mr. Darsay's brother, has been found murdered, and that a man known as Rodney Dene is wanted for the crime. A masked cowboy is seen to enter and hide. Loanda, an Indian girl whom Mr. Darsay has befriended, and who has been betrothed, is left alone in the office, when the cowboy comes from his hiding-place, and, taking off his mask, reveals himself to Loanda as "Rodney Dene." Now it appears that Mr. Darsay has an overseer and general manager of his mills, one Jack Kenyon, whom Loanda loves. This Jack Kenyon is a twin-brother of "Hal," known as Rodney Dene, and the man wanted for shooting Mr. Darsay's brother. Loanda believes that Jack Kenyon—who found her at the point of death some months previously—is her former lover, Rodney Dene, and she has been content and happy to be near him at the mills. Seeing now Kenyon (as she thinks), she is perplexed to find him hiding and attired in cowboy's dress, with his face masked, in Mr. Darsay's office. Hal, or "Rodney Dene," realises that she mistakes him for his brother, and decides not to reveal his identity. He tells Loanda that Mr. Darsay's brother had betrayed his wife at Silver Falls, and that she and his child had been drowned in flying from his home. For this he had shot Mr. Darsay's brother, and had sworn to take similar revenge on Darsay himself, but discovering Darsay to be a really good and just man at heart he decides not to kill him; but to enable him to make a fresh start in life he proposes to Loanda that they shall fly together with the money Mr. Darsay has placed in the safe. This Loanda stoutly refuses to do, and Dene, enraged, fires, and she falls wounded. Realising what he has done, Hal is overcome with remorse. He conceals the cash in his brother's desk, and hides in the store-room, in the hope of being able to escape later. Mr. Darsay enters, discovers Loanda unconscious, and is demanding where Kenyon, his overseer, is, when Jack Kenyon arrives, Loanda recovering, dumbly indicates to Kenyon (believing him to be Dene) that she will not betray him. Kenyon cannot understand her manner, and Mr. Darsay, finding suspicious evidence and noting Loanda's manner, accuses Kenyon of robbery. At this Willie enters, and, seeing Kenyon, denounces him as the murderer, Rodney Dene. Loanda, realising that her lover is accused, in a frenzied passion threatents to kill any who try to arrest him, and Kenyon entreats them to give him a chance of proving his innocence. Mr. Darsay agrees, and, at Kenyon's request, is left alone in the office. Kenyon, realising that this is really the work of his twin brother, Hal, decides to help him out of it, in fulfilment of a promise he had made to their dying mother. Loanda returns, stealthily, and entreats Kenyon to escape, when she is amazed to see Rodney Dene emerge from the store-room and go to his brother, and demand the money which he has placed in Jack's desk. Jack refuses, and Hal strikes his brother senseless, and escapes with the gold. Jack, recovering, reveals the truth to Loanda; but, to save his brother, decides to take the guilt upon himself by secretly leaving the mills. Meanwhile Hal has been caught in the act of escaping, and is hotly pursued, and hunted back to Mr. Darsay's office, where he confesses his guilt, explaining the circumstances under which he took the life of Mr. Darsay's brother. Realising that Hal has been deeply wronged, it is now resolved to save him from the military. Joe Hooker, anxious to escape from his coloured bride, seizes the opportunity to take Hal's place, and is carried off by the military after a desperate struggle. Thus Joe Hooker escapes his wife, and Hal Kenyon gets another chance.

We have nothing but the highest praise to bestow upon Mr. Frederick Maxwell for his powerful character-acting in the dual rôles of Hal Kenyon and Jack Kenyon, in which he throughout scored a conspicuous success. He was admirably seconded by Miss Lois Du Cane (Mrs. Maxwell) as the Indian girl, Loanda. She played in a charming manner a strong part, and looked very attractive in her picturesque Indian dress. Mr. Field Fisher, in the comedy part of Joe Hooker, kept the ball of merriment rolling, and did excellent work. Mr. Murray Yorke was very good as Mr. Darsay, and Mr. Dennis Clyde deserves special commendation as Mr. Darsay's son, Willie. Mr. Fred Darnton made a capital impression as Wang.

GUILDHALL SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

At the concert given by the students on Wednesday evening, Mr. J. B. Molyneux's organ solo, Concerto No. 2, in B flat (Handel), received well-merited applause, and Miss Florence Simpkins was equally successful in her violoncello solo, Sonata in A (Boccherini). "My Ships," sung by Miss Constance Cuthbert with praiseworthy finish and purity of intonation, gained for the young vocalist a hearty recall. A very youthful and clever mandoline pupil of Madame Waldahoff played Ten Have's "Allegro" with admirably neat execution, and had a most enthusiastic greeting from the large audience. The passionate sentiment of Coleridge-Taylor's song "Eleanöre" was cleverly interpreted by Mr. Eric R. Cooper, and Miss Bessie Hayward gave an excellent account of Schubert's charming song "Who is Sylvia?" In the first movement from Beethoven's Sonata, No. 1, Op. 31, for piano, Miss Florence B. Minnis did great credit to her professor, while Miss Gladys McAusland's two violin solos, "Adagio" (Ries) and Mlynarski's "Mazur" were very attractive features in the programme. Other clever students were Mr. G. J. Allbright, who played W. Faulkes's "Air and Variations in G" for organ, and Miss Edith White, who was set down for the song "I long for you" (Bischoff). The concert was agreeably varied by a clever recitation, "The Cattle Thief" (Pauline Johnson), given by Miss Annie Walden, a pupil of Miss Kate Rorke. Miss Jenny Hyman was the accompanist.

THE Duke of Schleswig-Holstein and Princess Louise-Augusta of Schleswig-Holstein witnessed at the Adelphi on Monday evening the performance of The Only Way.

CONFERENCE AT SPRING GARDENS.

A Conference between representatives of the London County Council and the Metropolitan Borough Councils was held at the County Hall, Spring Gardens, on the 5th inst. The Conference considered the draft by-laws under Section 2 of the Advertisements Regulation Act, 1907.

These draft by-laws, which had been prepared with the view of affording a basis for discussion, and have not been submitted to or approved by the Council, were as follows:—

Draft by-laws under Section 2 (1) of the Advertisements Regulation Act, 1907, for the regulation and control of hoardings and similar structures used for the purpose of advertising when they exceed twelve feet in height.

Definitions.—1. In these by-laws unless the context otherwise requires:

"advertisement hoarding" means any hoarding or similar structure, or any part thereof, exceeding 12 feet in height, on or over any land, house, building, structure, street, or public place, and used for the purpose of advertisement.

"advertisement" means any word, letter, model, sign, placard, board, notice, device, or representation, in the nature of or employed wholly or in part for the purpose of advertisement, announcement, or direction.

"height" in relation to any advertisement hoarding means the measurement taken from the general level of the ground beneath such hoarding to the top of such hoarding.

"street" includes any highway, and any road, bridge, lane, path, footway, mews, square, court, alley, or passage, whether a thoroughfare or not.

"metropolitan borough council" means the metropolitan borough council in whose district an advertisement hoarding is erected or fixed or intended to be erected or fixed.

2. No person shall erect or fix or cause to be erected or fixed any advertisement hoarding without first obtaining the approval in writing of the metropolitan borough council to the construction thereof and to the manner in which such hoarding is to be erected or fixed.

3. No person shall erect, fix, or retain or cause to be erected, fixed, or retained any advertisement hoarding so as to be at a distance from any street less than the height of such hoarding above twelve feet from the level of such street. Provided that this by-law shall not apply to any advertisement hoarding affixed to the external wall of any building, and not projecting on or over the public way.

4. No person shall erect, fix, or retain, or cause to be erected, fixed or retained, any advertisement hoarding so as to project or be on or over the public way or more than three inches beyond the general line of buildings in any street or part of a street, place, or row of houses.

5. No person shall erect, fix, or retain, or cause to be erected, fixed, or retained, any advertisement hoarding to a greater height than twenty feet.

6. The owner of and any person in receipt of any rents or profits from the use of any advertisement hoarding shall maintain such hoarding in a proper state of repair and security, and in all respects to the satisfaction of the metropolitan borough council.

7. No person shall exhibit, or cause to be exhibited, on any advertisement hoarding, any advertisement which is illuminated by artificial light either continuously or intermittently.

8. No person shall exhibit, or cause to be exhibited, on any advertisement hoarding, any advertisement that is not placed on, or upon, or affixed to such hoarding in a neat and orderly manner and is not surrounded with a suitable plain margin of a width not less than one-fourth of the least dimension of such advertisement.

9. Where the metropolitan borough council is satisfied that any advertisement exhibited on any advertisement hoarding is so unsighly, torn or defaced that it should be removed from such hoarding, the person exhibiting such advertisement, and, in his default, the owner of and any person in receipt of any rents or profits from the use of such hoarding shall on receiving notice in writing to that effect from the metropolitan borough council remove such advertisement within such time as may be specified in such notice.

10. The owner of and any person in receipt of any rents or profits from the use of any advertisement hoarding shall when required by the metropolitan borough council furnish the name and address of any person exhibiting any advertisement on such hoarding.

11. Any advertisement hoarding in use at the time of the making of these by-laws and any advertisement exhibited at such time shall be exempt from the operation of these by-laws for a period of five years from the date of the confirmation thereof.

12. Nothing in these by-laws shall apply to any hoarding used for the purpose of any advertisement in pursuance of a licence granted by a metropolitan borough council or other authority under any statutory powers in that behalf, or to any hoarding erected or set up for the purpose of any building operation so long as such hoarding is used for such purpose.

13. These by-laws shall apply to the whole of the administrative County of London excluding the City of London.

Draft by-laws under Section 2 (2) of the Advertisements Regulation preventing the exhibition of advertisements so as to affect injuriously a public park or pleasure promenade or to disfigure the natural landscape.

1. In these by-laws unless the context otherwise requires: "advertisement" means any word, letter, model, sign, placard, board, notice, device, or representation, in the nature of or employed wholly or in part for the purpose of advertisement, announcement or direction.

2. No person shall exhibit any advertisement so as to affect injuriously the amenities of any public park or pleasure promenade, or so that such advertisement or any hoarding or similar structure on which such advertisement is exhibited may be seen by any person in or on such places.

3. No person shall exhibit any advertisement so as to disfigure the natural beauty of any landscape.

4. Any advertisement exhibited at the time of the making of these by-laws shall be exempt from the operation of these by-laws for a period of five years from the date of the confirmation thereof.

4. These by-laws shall apply to the whole of the administrative County of London excluding the City of London.

NOTE.—Under Section 10 of the above-mentioned Act, if any person acts in contravention of or fails to comply with any by-law made under the Act, he shall be liable on summary conviction to a penalty not exceeding five pounds and to a penalty not exceeding twenty shillings for every day during which the offence is continued after his conviction thereof.

The Conference sat about three hours; there was an animated discussion, and numerous proposed alterations were brought forward, which will in due course be considered by the Building Act Committee in the light of the opinions expressed at the Conference.

A number of gentlemen interested in the matter under discussion were present at the Conference.

THE Central Theatre, Northwich, is closed for the next two or three weeks for extensive alterations.

THEATRICAL GOSSIP.

SIR CHARLES WYNDHAM has been elected first president of the Eccentric Club, and will occupy the chair at the anniversary dinner to be held at the Hotel Cecil on Sunday next. Sir Charles, it is interesting to add, has decided to give one more representation of his version of David Garrick at the New Theatre on Thursday next. Miss Mary Moore will also be in the cast.

MR. BEERBOHM TREE will keep Christmas at His Majesty's by the production of a seasonable play called Pinkie and the Fairies. The fantasy is in three acts, and is written by Mr. Graham Robertson, whose pen has been pleasantly employed in some charming picture books, and the music is by Mr. Frederick Norton, the entertainer. The action is divided between London suburbs and Fairyland, so that it may be presumed that an agreeable mixture of the real and the fanciful will be presented. Miss Iris Hawkins and Master Philip Tonge will play the two principal juvenile parts, and a strong cast will be engaged in the representation, in which, however, Mr. Tree will not himself appear.

PREPARATIONS for the institution of the Afternoon Theatre at His Majesty's Theatre are actively proceeding, and rehearsals have begun of Hannele, which is to be the initial production. The title-rôle will be played by Miss Marie Löhr, whose youth, beauty, and delicacy should ensure a rendering of exquisite effect. The first performance, it may be added, is fixed for Tuesday, Dec. 8, and the play will be repeated on the afternoons of the following Thursday and Friday.

MR. CYRIL MAUDE was the first of the trio of London actor-managers to fulfil the series of "command" performances. Three vanloads of scenery for The Flag Lieutenant went by road to Sandringham on Wednesday, and the properties, uniforms, and costumes, filling two covered vans, were sent by train yesterday in time for the performance in the evening. The programme that confronted the company from midday yesterday was a formidable one. The arrangements were as follows:—Leave St. Pancras 12.20 p.m., lunch on train 1 p.m, arrive Wolferton 3.30 p.m., arrive Sandringham 4 p.m., rehearsal 5.30 p.m., dinner 7.45 p.m., performance 10 p.m., supper 12.30 a.m., leave Wolferton (Saturday) 2 a.m., arrive St. Pancras 4.35 a.m., matinée at Playhouse 2.30 p.m., evening performance 8.30 p.m.

MR. ARTHUR BOURCHIER and Miss Violet Vanbrugh will return to the Garrick on Feb. 2, when Henry Bernstein's four-act play Samson will be produced. The piece was a great success at the Paris Renaissance, where it was seen last year by Mr. Charles Frohman, who invited Mr. Bourchier to join him in producing it in London, with himself and his wife in the leading parts. The adaptation into English was made by Mr. William Gillette, who is making a great success in the title-rôle at the Criterion Theatre, New York. The scenes are all laid in Paris, and the action is described as taking place in that city "not long ago." The London production of An Outsider, which Mr. Bourchier recently tried in Manchester, has been deferred till after the run of Samson.

MISS LENA ASHWELL will bring to a close the present run of The Sway Boat at the Kingsway Theatre with the two performances on Saturday next, and will produce on the following Tuesday a new play by H. Herman Chilton, entitled Grit. In addition to Miss Ashwell, the cast will consist of Miss Kate Rorke, Miss Frances Ivor, Miss Nannie Bennett, Mr. C. M. Hallard, Mr. Dennis Eadie, Mr. Ernest Cosham, Mr. H. Athol Forde, and Mr. Norman McKinnel. Booking for Grit has already begun, playgoers availing themselves largely of the convenience that seats may be reserved in all parts of the theatre.

MR. EDWARD TERRY brought a highly successful visit to Belfast to a close at the Theatre Royal on Saturday night, when the house was crowded, and the reception accorded the performance was of a most enthusiastic character. The programme consisted of Kerry and The Magistrate. In answer to demands for a speech, Mr. Terry expressed gratitude for the sympathy shown to him in his "dilapidated and undignified condition as a magistrate." "I must, however," he added, "discharge a very pleasant function, and that is to thank you very heartily for the way you always receive me and my company. It is always a great pleasure to me to give something of a novelty, and I think you thoroughly appreciated Fiander's Widow. I may be allowed to say, as an admirer of the piece myself, if you did not appreciate Fiander's Widow you are no Irishmen. If I am allowed to come back again, and to cement our acquaintance—and that cement is not likely to become broken—I hope in the future I shall always receive that kind, friendly, and loving greeting which I have at all times received at your hands."

MISS CARRIE MOORE, who is playing Sonia in The Merry Widow in Australia, was quietly married on Sept. 29 to Mr. P. P. Bigwood, a young Englishman who recently settled in New Zealand. When asked by a local reporter as to what her intentions were, Mrs. Bigwood said: "Of course, I'm going to leave the stage; not immediately, but at the conclusion of The Merry Widow. I am already under engagement to appear in Christchurch, and at a pantomime at the Adelphi Theatre, London. Consequently, I will have to fulfil that first. I will fill the principal rôle in the pantomime, and then it is 'Good-bye' to the stage for ever."

MISS MOORE was born in New South Wales, and had the distinction in Australia of being the youngest singer who ever appeared in leading parts in Sydney and Melbourne, where she played with J. C. Williamson's Comic Opera Company. As a girl of fourteen she appeared in the Sydney pantomime Djin-Djin in 1896, and three years later sang Maid Marian in Robin Hood, with Miss Florence Perry as Annabel. Miss Moore came to England in the August of 1903, and immediately went on tour with Mr. George Edwardes's San Toy company.

THE September of the same year witnessed her début in London, when she replaced Miss Letty Lind as Ellen in The Girl from Kay's at the Apollo. She played Naitooma in The Cingalee through its long run at Daly's, and Millicent Leroy in The Blue Moon at the Lyric, and was one of the fascinating pair in The Dairymaids produced at the Apollo in 1906. Her success as Honour in Tom Jones at the same theatre is of recent memory. Last Christmas Miss Moore played the Prince in Cinderella at Birmingham, and, as indicated above, will be in this year's pantomime at the Adelphi. Miss Moore sailed with her husband for England on the 4th inst.

MR. SEYMOUR HICKS is offering a substantial reward for the recovery of the greyhound which has played throughout the run of The Gay Gordons and was to have been with him at the Kennington Theatre this week. After playing at the Coronet on Saturday night last, the animal was being taken to the Kennington Theatre in charge of the keeper, when it became frightened by a rapidly-driven motor-car, and bolted. The dog answers to the name of Brandy, and the search should consequently be a "spirited" one.

LIBERAL support is assured to Mr. Cyril Maude, when he takes the chair at the eighteenth annual dinner of the Actors' Benevolent Fund, in the Whitehall Rooms on Sunday, Dec. 13. Mr. Maude has fixed upon a Sunday in order that the members of the theatrical profession may be able to attend, and no effort is being spared to make the gathering a record one.

MISS DOLORES DRUMMOND, who is to be given a benefit matinée at the Playhouse on Nov. 20 upon her retirement after a stage career of over half a century, was originally intended to be an artist, but she took to the stage at eighteen. Speaking of her childhood days she said: "I used to read Shakespeare to my mother. We were not exactly rich; in fact, all day long, perhaps, I had to be content with half a dozen biscuits and a glass of water. But I got to know my Shakespeare nearly by heart, and when the leading lady in a touring company fell ill I was able—after a fashion—to play Ophelia at a moment's notice."

PLENTY of hard work has fallen to the lot of the estimable actress, who first appeared in London at the Standard with Mr. W. H. Pennington as Hermione in A Winter's Tale, in November, 1874. "In those days," she said "we used to be satisfied with anything from £3 to £6 a week, and make our own clothes into the bargain. Many a time I sat up all night making a dress and learning a part at the same time. Nowadays gorgeous dresses are supplied, and many people draw very large salaries." The programme for the matinée will include many leading West-end artists.

MR. ARTHUR COLLINS has signed a contract with Mr. Cecil Raleigh and Mr. Henry Hamilton by which they are retained for next year's autumn drama at Drury Lane, and an option upon their services is secured for a similar production the following year. Mr. Raleigh and Mr. Hamilton have arranged to spend Christmas together in Portugal, in order to facilitate the acquirement of fresh material and local colour for their new piece for the Lane.

THE Managers' Club committee held a meeting at their rooms, Savoy Mansions, Strand, on the 6th inst., when there were present Mr. Leveaux (in the chair), Messrs. Paumier, Lambert, Weathersby, Carey, Graham Falcon, Howard Kelly, Muskerry Tilson, hon. solicitor, and Martin, secretary. The following gentlemen were elected members:—Mr. F. Payne-Palmer, Mr. A. H. Bennell, Mr. Ralph W. Hutton, Mr. Ivan Cleveland, Mr. C. T. Doe, and Mr. Harry Joseph.

A MEETING of the committee of the Touring Managers' Association was held at the Club on the same day. Present:—Mr. M. V. Leveaux (in the chair), Messrs. Weathersby, Falcon, Phillips, Lambert, Kelly, Paumier, Howard, Muskerry Tilson, hon. solicitor, and Martin, secretary. The secretary reported an interview he had had with the theatrical representative of the Great Eastern Railway, in reference to Mr. Percy Hutchison's complaint, and was instructed to ask the Great Northern and Midland Joint Company to communicate on the matter with the Great Eastern Railway, so that the trouble should not occur again.

MR. LEVEAUX brought forward the question of traders' tickets, and it was decided to write to the Clearing-house Association and the railway companies, to ask if the privilege of travelling at three-quarter fare cannot be extended to managers of touring companies when visiting the towns in which they are performing.

THE secretary was instructed to write to the Lord Chamberlain in reference to the new clause, re Sunday Entertainments, introduced into theatrical licences, and to ask if public performances would be permitted under the licence, and under what circumstances.

THE ninth annual dinner of the O.P. Club will take place at the Criterion on Sunday, when Miss Hilda Trevelyan and Mr. Gerald Du Maurier will be the guests of the evening. Miss Lillah McCarthy will respond on behalf of "The Ladies," and Mr. Sidney Dark will propose the toast of Mr. Max Pemberton, the chairman.

MR. W. CLARKSON again scored a triple event at Covent Garden Ball on the 6th inst., when he gained first prize for a dress entitled "The Dainty Firework," second for "Queen of the Balkans," and third for "Christmas Greetings to our Colonies." Each confection reflected the ingenuity of the popular costumier and won general admiration.

A MODIFICATION has been made by Mr. Tom B. Davis of his rule regarding the matinée hat at the Queen's Theatre, and in future ladies over fifty will be allowed to wear bonnets, providing they are close fitting and do not obstruct the view of others. The concession was in deference to a letter received from an elderly lady, who preferred, in the interests of her health, to leave the theatre last Saturday rather than remove her small bonnet.

THE campaign in Italy has at length been brought to a conclusion, and the downfall of the Brobdingnagian bonnet is assured. The Prefect has re-enforced an ancient by-law, according to which all ladies witnessing public entertainments in theatres and music halls from any part of the house, with the sole exception of private boxes, are obliged to remove their headgear under penalty of expulsion. The management, on its part, is obliged to make suitable provision for the storage of ladies' hats free of charge.

THE full cast of The Antelope, by Adrian Ross and Hugo Felix, with which Mr. Henry R. Smith will inaugurate his tenancy of the Waldorf Theatre on Saturday, the 28th inst., will consist of Messrs. Fred Wright, jun., Farren Soutar, Fred Emney, John Brabourne, and J. Cannot, and Misses Maudie Thornton, Florence Lloyd, Hilda Stewart, Kitty Gordon, Jose Collins, Vivienne West, Ethel Oliver, Dorothy Monkman, Beatrice Read, and Lily Mills. The three acts will be laid respectively at the reception room of the Antelope Agency, at an artist's studio at Kensington, and at a houseboat on the upper Thames.

"THE PIRATES OF PENZANCE" will be revived by Mrs. D'Oyly Carte, at the Savoy, on Tuesday evening, December 1. Mr. Rutland Barrington will be again seen in an original creation, that of the Sergeant of Police, and other Savoyards will take part in the performance. The cast will include Mr. C. H. Workman, Mr. Henry A. Lytton, Mr. Leo Sheffield, Mr. Henry Herbert, Miss Dorothy Court, Miss Jessie Rose, Miss Beatrice Boarer, Miss Ethel Lewis, and Miss Louie René. Iolanthe will be played up to Saturday, Nov. 28, the theatre being closed on the following Monday.

MISS ROSE MONCRIEFF writes:—"In the interest of other companies who may be booked at the Hippodrome Theatre, Mansfield, shall feel obliged if you will insert this letter. On June 2 I received a contract from Mr. Herbert Darnley for my Bells of Old York company to open at above six nights Nov. 9. On Oct. 26 my business-manager forwarded plots, copy for day bill, printing, &c., with the result the former were returned a week later by the caretaker unopened and written on the back 'Closed; no dramatic licence.' It was then too late to book another date, so have consequently had to pay my company being out the week. I have since ascertained that this place was closed on July 4, and the management have not in any way intimated the fact."

"BREWSTER'S MILLIONS," as played by Mr. Percy Hutchison and his clever company, continues to meet with unvarying success everywhere. The company finished on Saturday a most successful week at the Theatre Royal, Brighton, where for the fifteenth time in succession all previous Hutchison records were broken. The same thing occurred at Cambridge the preceding week, hundreds of undergraduates being turned away on the Saturday night. Next week the play pays its first visit to the suburbs at Croydon, and later will be at the Coronet and Kennington theatres, when Londoners will be able to renew acquaintance with one of the most mirthful and remarkable plays of the day. Brewster's Millions is booked well into 1910, and the play has been secured for the Easter attraction at the Court Theatre, Liverpool, and for the following year for Nottingham.

MR. D. BRANDON will give a special matinée at the Court Theatre on Wednesday, in aid of the funds of the Hospital for Sick Children. The programme will include Priscilla, a Georgian duologue, by Patrick Kirwan; Winter Sport, a new one-act play, by D. Brandon; and The Fotheringay, an adaptation by Patrick Kirwan from Thackeray's novel "Pendennis."

MR. W. MONTGOMERY MARTIN, the secretary of the Touring Managers' Association, having asked the Lord Chamberlain for a more explicit reply to their letter requesting him to state exactly the meaning of the new clause about Sunday performances which has been introduced into his license, has received the following reply:—"Sir,—The Lord Chamberlain desires me to thank you for your letter of the 7th inst., and to explain that the clause with regard to Sunday entertainments, which he has inserted in the regulations attached to his license does not refer to the public performance of stage plays on Sundays, which is not permitted under any conditions in theatres licensed by him.—Yours faithfully, Douglas Dawson, Col., Comptroller."

MME. KATE FLINN'S opening reception of the season at the Hotel Metropole, Brighton, on Saturday afternoon, was attended by a select and fashionable gathering. Mme. Flinn is a polished exponent in the art of voice culture, and the effect of her tuition was reflected in many charming numbers rendered by her pupils. Praise must be awarded to Miss Ruby Cobbett for the masterly rendering of the gavotte from Mignon, for which she was encored. In response she gave "Rose in the bud" charmingly, and also delighted her hearers with "The Valley of Dreams," an as yet unpublished song. Miss Barbara Battishill sang with great sweetness and effect the two bird songs from the well-known cycle by Liza Lehmann, and for an encore sang "The night and you" in finished style. An old Italian aria also won a hearty recall, "Eyes that used to gaze in mine" being given in response. Miss Marguerita Lowinska's flexible voice was heard to much advantage in Solveig's song, with "Tu Commandes" (Chopin) for an encore, her later contributions being "April Morn," which merited a warm recall, and Liza Lehmann's "Prince Charming."

ENCORES were indeed the order of the afternoon, and a double one was conferred upon Miss Elsom, who possesses a fine voice of great promise, and rendered "Nobil Signor," from Les Huguenots; entertaining and clever were Miss Le Hay's songs at the piano; delightful contributions were given by Miss Nelson and her sister, Miss Gladys Nelson; Miss Chard gave a tasteful rendering of "Two Kisses"; Miss Holman added a well-executed violin solo to her vocal selections; and Miss Shroeter was exceedingly pleasing with a fairy-like chansonnette, entitled "Dainty Little Maiden." The pianoforte solos by Miss Shaw were "Scherzo" (Chopin) and "Pappelons," both evincing first-class execution. The function was brought to a close by some perfectly charming songs by Mme. Flinn, who was greeted in the warmest fashion, the audience being loath to part with her after a double encore.

MISS DORA PASS, who is playing the part of Helen Wyngate in The Diver's Luck at the Theatre Royal, Cardiff, last week was the recipient of several lovely bouquets and beautiful baskets of flowers from numerous friends in the town.

A GENERAL meeting of the Actors' Union has been called for Tuesday, Dec. 1, at 2.30, at the Hummums Hotel, Covent Garden, to consider the advisability of altering the method of subscription. The third dinner of the Union has been fixed for Sunday, Dec. 13. It may be pointed out that the date chosen is identical with that of the Actors' Benevolent Fund dinner.

A ROMANTIC play in four acts, entitled The Risen Dead, by Ridley Ryott, was produced at the Shakespeare Theatre, Clapham, last Saturday, for copyright purposes.

MR. H. LOUIS WILSON has been engaged by Mr. Wentworth Croke as stage manager for The Prodigal Son second company.

MISS DOROTHY CLIFTON, who on Oct 31 terminated a successful three months' engagement with Mr. T. Edward Ward as Nell Greystone in Mr. Walter Howard's drama Second to None, is a young actress of great charm, whose natural, refined, and sympathetic acting has won for her many warm admirers. Although quite young, she has already played several leading parts with much success, her well-modulated voice and clear delivery winning much commendation. Brought up and educated abroad, she is an excellent linguist, and excels as a musician, singer, and dancer.

MISS MARIE LOHR, the youngest Margaret who has ever graced the English stage, reached her 75th performance at His Majesty's Theatre on Tuesday night. The charming young actress is enamoured of her part, which she considers a wonderful one. It is interesting to recall that Miss Lohr's mother, Miss Kate Bishop, who is now playing at Terry's in The Passing of the Third Floor Back, played Margaret when she was about twenty-five in Melbourne.

REMARKABLE scenes of enthusiasm were witnessed at the Grand Theatre, Lancaster, last week, the occasion being the first visit of H. Armitage and Arthur Leigh's Leah Kleschna to the town. The house was crowded nightly, and at the close of the performance on Saturday night the curtain had to be raised over and over again before the audience finally dispersed.

MR. THOMAS THORNE will recommence touring with the evergreen Our Boys on Monday next at the Devonshire Park Theatre, Eastbourne, under the management of Mr. Russell Rosse.

THE Robert Arthur Theatres Company held its eleventh annual general meeting on Monday at 24a, Regent-street, Mr. Robert Arthur (chairman and managing-director) presiding. The statement of accounts submitted showed the net income for the year to be £25,586, an increase over last year, and with £5,147 brought forward the total to be dealt with was £30,733. The sinking fund was £5,500. A sum of £8,027 was written off for depreciation and repairs and renewals to stocks and £1,365 on the re-upholstering and redecorating of the various theatres. The directors propose to declare dividends of 5 per cent. on the ordinary shares and 6 per cent. on the preference shares, add £1,000 to reserve—making that item £4,000—and carry forward £3,048. The report and accounts were adopted.

THE new comedy by Mr. C. Haddon Chambers entitled Sir Anthony will replace The Early Worm at Wyndham's on Saturday, Nov. 28, a date, it may be mentioned, that has been selected by Mr. H. C. Smith for his opening at the Waldorf. Gratifying success has already attended Sir Anthony in America, where it was produced a little more than a year ago. The principal part is to be played here by Mr. Weedon Grossmith, and included in the cast will be Miss Nina Boucicault, Miss Suzanne Sheldon, Mr. Edmund Maurice, and Mr. J. D. Beveridge.

MRS. PATRICK CAMPBELL appeared in the title-rôle Mr. W. B. Yeats' poetic play Deirdre at the Abbey Theatre, Dublin, on Monday, when a large and fashionable audience accorded the eminent actress a flattering reception. Mr. Fred Donovan filled the part of Fergus with credit, Miss Sara Allgood enacted the rôle of the First Musician excellently, and Mr. Arthur Sinclair was successful as Concobar. The minor parts were well filled. The Rogueries of Scapin preceded.

AT the close of the performance, Mr. Yeats, who was received with applause, said:—I can only say very few words, after one of the greatest experiences which can ever come to a writer—that is, to hear his words perfectly spoken and perfectly acted. It is for these experiences that we write; for these that we live. I am profoundly moved, and so you must permit me to remain silent.

MR. HUGH FLEMING will conclude at the end of this month an eight years' continuous engagement with The Belle of New York and Prince of Pilsen companies as advance manager.

MR. M. RUSSELL ROSSE has arranged with Messrs. French, Ltd., to give some special performances of Caste in the larger towns, anterior to its lapse of copyright. A special production will be made on Dec. 7 at the King's Theatre, Glasgow. Mr. David James will be the Eccles.

THE Guildhall School of Music Elocution Prize was gained by Miss Anais Holbrooke, and not by Miss Ethelmay Barwell-Holbrooke as was inadvertently stated. It is to Miss Holbrooke too that Mercutio's speech from Romeo and Juliet, which was so warmly approved at the recital last week, should have been attributed.

MR. SIDNEY COOPER sent a congratulatory message to the King on Monday morning and received the following telegram in reply: "Please convey the King's sincere thanks to your orchestra, staff, and members of Mr. George Alexander's company for their loyal congratulations and good wishes on the occasion of his Majesty's birthday.—KNOLLYS."

WE regret to learn that Mrs. F. M. Paget (née Patty Chapman) lies seriously ill at her residence at Eversleigh, Frances-road, Windsor. Much sympathy, we feel sure, will be extended to both Mr. and Mrs. Paget by their numerous friends.

MR. DAN ROLYAT has now quite recovered from his severe cold, and, like Richard, is himself again. The droll comedian is in extra good form this week, and had a terrific reception at Her Majesty's Theatre, Dundee, on Monday evening.

MR. ERNEST CH. GITTINS who until recently was the able acting-manager of the Royal Carl Rosa Opera Company for many years, has been engaged in the same capacity for Mr. Oscar Asche and Miss Lily Brayton's company. Since his retirement from the Carl Rosa company Mr. Gittins has been successfully touring a condensed version of The Daughter of the Regiment and other operas on the music halls, and the company, with Mlle. Adele Prescott, the well-known soprano, as prima donna, is now playing the Moss and Stoll tour.

THE presentation of Oscar Wilde's Salome has been prevented in St. Petersburg by the intervention of the Holy Synod. That body at first forbade the performance altogether on the ground that it was blasphemous, but subsequently gave permission for the production if Salome were turned into an Indian Queen, if John the Baptist's head were made a king's corpse, and if Salome's dance were performed by the Queen and her dames. This mutilated version was to have been given on Wednesday last, but hardly had the performance begun when the Synod once more changed its mind, and the police stopped the play, driving the audience from the theatre. It is stated that the management will lodge a complaint against the Holy Synod for the arbitrary withdrawal of the licence issued in the regular way by the dramatic censor.

MISS DUNDAS SLATER, the eighteen-year-old daughter of the popular manager of the Coliseum, at an hour's notice was called upon to play Miss Olive May's part of Tita in Havana at the Gaiety Theatre on Monday night, and will retain the part during Miss May's recovery from a sprained knee. Miss Dundas Slater made the most of her opportunity, and gave a very bright and charming rendering of the character. Her experience on the boards has not been restricted to musical comedy, for she has appeared as Lady Orreyed in The Second Mrs. Tanqueray and as Tow-Tow in Sweet Nancy.

MR. ERIC WILLIAMS has arranged to repeat his patriotic recital in aid of Lord Roberts's Veterans' Relief Fund, at St. Leonards on Thursday afternoon, the 26th. Major-General Sir John Campbell, Bart., C.B., has promised to attend on behalf of the veterans, and Mr. Val. Marriott's orchestra will supply the musical numbers.

THE ermine coat worn by Miss Ethel Irving in the last act of Dolly Reforming Herself, at the Haymarket Theatre, is composed of furs valued at more than £300, and considerable interest is attached to its acquisition by the management. When the play was first put on the coat was only hired, but the anxiety attendant upon its safety impelled the Haymarket authorities to buy it outright and insure it for nearly its full value. After each performance the coat is securely locked up in a safe.

THE pantomime at the Theatre Royal, Glasgow, will be produced early in December by Mr. Robert Arthur for Mr. Fred Wyndham. The subject will be Cinderella, and the cast includes Mr. George Robey, Mr. Harry Dent, Mr. Willie Garvey, the Brothers Obo, and Misses Nancy Langtyre, Iris Hoey, and Meg Hamylton.

MISS ETHEL VAN PRAAGH completed her six hundredth performance of Marion in An Unwedded Wife on Wednesday evening at the Theatre Royal, Stratford. The performance given by the talented actress has won widespread admiration throughout.

"THE ONLY WAY" will remain in the bill at the Adelphi Theatre during next week, such a demand for seats for this revival having been made that Mr. Martin Harvey determined not to replace it with The Breed of the Treshams, as he had originally intended. His determination was strengthened by the fact that his time, together with that of his whole staff, is fully occupied with the numerous details of the command performance of The Corsican Brothers at Windsor on the 18th. The whole Adelphi staff are daily engaged at Windsor rehearsing the various effects on the stage of the Waterloo Chamber, which has had to be extensively altered in order that the various picturesque effects may be properly rendered.

A MATINÉE, organised by Miss Catherine Lewis, will be given at the New Theatre on Tuesday, in aid of Miss Olive Christian Malvery's Shelter for Homeless Women. The programme will include a one-act comedy, called Nell Gwynne, the Player, with Miss Jean Aylwin as Nell Gwynne, Mr. Charles Quartermaine as Charles II., and Miss Edyth Olive as the Duchess of Portsmouth. Recitations will be given by Mrs. Beerbohm Tree and Mr. Henry Ainley, and songs by Miss Marie George and Miss Ada Reeve. Songs, violin and pianoforte solos will be contributed by Miss Jessie Bristol, Miss Dinorben, Mr. Rousby Woof, Mr. Arthur L'Estrange, and Mr. Spencer Dyke, &c.

MR. HUGH MONTGOMERY has been invited to impersonate the Second Player to Mr. Forbes-Robertson's Hamlet, on the occasion of the Ristori matinée at His Majesty's on Nov. 30. Mr. Montgomery supported Mme. Ristori during both of her last English tours, and was the recipient from her of a handsome gold breast-pin.

MR. NORMAN V. NORMAN and Miss Beatrice Wilson, who were motoring with a party of friends the other day, met with an unpleasant experience, the car suddenly breaking down in the wilds of the country several miles from the nearest town. After a delay of some hours another car came to the assistance of the party, and took them in tow, Mr. Norman and Miss Wilson arriving at the theatre just in time to rush upon the stage.

AT the Gaiety Theatre, Ayr, last week Miss Irene Munroe took up the part of the Woman in Montague Beaudyn's company, The Power of a Wicked Woman, at twenty-four hours' notice with great success. She was highly complimented by the management.

BY the courtesy of Mr. Wentworth Croke in releasing him for the run of the pantomime, Mr. Reginald A. Hunt will be enabled to stage-manage Mr. Robert Arthur's Aladdin at the Theatre Royal, Newcastle. The cast will include such favourite artists as Miss Violet Lloyd, Happy Fanny Fields, Mr. Malcolm Scott, Mr. Harry Tate, and Regan and Ryan.

IN consequence of so many members of The Flower Girl company being engaged for pantomime, Mr. Charles M. Bestic has decided not to run through Christmas. The successful musical comedy will resume its tour in the early spring, for which some excellent bookings have been secured.

A NEW three-act comedy entitled The New Governess, founded by Walter Frith on a story by Mr. G. S. Layard, will be produced at Malvern on Thursday next. Mr. Leon M. Lion, who has recently been appearing at His Majesty's, will play the principal part, and the cast will also include Mr. Rudge Harding, Mr. E. H. Kelly, Mr. H. de Lange, Mr. C. Derwent, Miss Roxy Barton, Miss Vivian Reynolds, and Miss Ina Pelly. Mr. Frith, it will be remembered, is the author of The Man of Forty, produced at the St. James's by Mr. George Alexander.

MR. CHARLES FROHMAN returned on Wednesday from Paris, having secured the English and American rights in MM. de Croisset and Maurice Leblanc's four-act drama Arsène Lupin, produced at the Athénée on Oct. 28, and fully noticed in our last issue. Mr. Frohman also arranged to take up his option on Henry Bernstein's latest play, Israel, and secured from MM. de Caillavet and Robert de Flers, authors of Love Watches, their comedy to be produced shortly at the Gymnase.

THE second act finds Miss Vanbrugh in an elegant coat and skirt of rose-coloured poplin. The coat is plain at the back, and in front it has small revers of satin, and is fastened with black velvet buttons. When thrown open it shows a single-breasted waistcoat of beige-coloured moiré, fastened with the same buttons; and the long sleeves are turned back with tiny cuffs of satin. The skirt is short and plain, except that it is cut in two pieces joined with wrapped seams.

MISS VANBRUGH'S third confection is made of Delft-blue satin draped with chiffon in a most graceful manner. The most distinguished mark of the robe is the way in which the chiffon is brought over one shoulder, there to merge with the draperies in the front of the corsage. The guimpe is made of finely-tucked-net overlaid with straps of satin buttoned in their place, and the tightly-fitting sleeves are relieved by means of bands of lace insertion passed round the arms. The blue moiré antique cloak of a darker shade of Delft-blue which is worn with this high-necked and long-sleeved evening dress has a collar touched with gold embroidery ending in tasselled stoles at the waist, and at the sides the material is draped, leaving room for the arms to pass through, and again weighted by means of large tassels.

GRIM humour was sometimes associated with Sardou's early struggles in Paris when, as a poor and friendless medical student, he was seeking to augment a scanty allowance by teaching Latin to wealthier but less gifted fellow-students. Then he tried his hand at writing, and hawked three of his plays round Paris theatres. "But managers with one exception," said he, "were too busy to see me or to read my plays. One gentleman condescended to read my productions, and he pronounced them rubbish. The sequel is soon told. A few years later I had no difficulty whatever in disposing of all three without having altered a single line."

PRETTY sentiment is contained in the story of the water-carrier—for in the days of Sardou's youth they carried water through the streets of Paris for domestic use—to whom the embryo dramatist owed the sum of sixty francs. "I cannot pay you," he said, frankly, to the honest porter, "and I know not when I can." The good fellow replied, "Never mind; I know you will succeed: I see your industry every time I come. Pay when you can."

AN amusing story is related in connection with Sardou's children, who were brought up at Marly in such constant contact with souvenirs of Louis Quatorze, and who heard such frequent reference to what the "Grand Monarque" said or did, that they firmly believed him to be alive. They were out for a walk one day with their father and a friend, and, as usual, there was talk about Louis Quatorze. Passing one of the old houses on the wooded hillside, Sardou pointed out a great avenue of elms, and remarked, passim, that at one time there had been arbours at the side, but that these had been cut away when Louis Quatorze died. As the party turned back Sardou noticed some of the children crying. "What is the matter?" asked Sardou. "Because Louis Quatorze is dead," said the children, almost inconsolable.

ITEMS OF INTEREST.

Comyns Carr's Reminiscences.

MR. J. COMYNS CARR'S autobiography, "Some Eminent Victorians," recently published by Duckworth and Co., and very beautifully illustrated, is entirely interesting and agreeable, and a most amusing, various, and vivaciously written volume. There is not a dull chapter in the book; but our readers will, of course, turn with eagerness to that entitled "Men of the Theatre," from which we pick some plums of anecdote.

Tennyson's Thirst.

"IT was while Irving was rehearsing Becket that he told me a story of Tennyson that has both a pathetic and humorous significance. In the earlier days, when The Cup was in preparation, he had been to see Tennyson in the Isle of Wight to discuss his ideas for its presentation. After dinner, as he told me, the dessert and the wine were set out upon a separate table, and when they were seated the poet asked Irving if he would like a glass of port. 'Yes, I like a glass of port,' replied the actor. Upon which Tennyson, taking him at his word, poured him out a glass of port, and all unconsciously finished the remainder of the bottle himself. At a later time, when Becket was to be presented, Tennyson was suffering from gout and was under a strict régime. But the same graceful little ceremony was observed, and again his host inquired of Irving whether he would like a glass of port, but on this occasion, as Irving related to me, the positions were reversed, for poor Lord Tennyson was only permitted a single glass, and Irving finished the bottle.

"NEXT morning the actor had to leave early, and had therefore taken leave of his host overnight. But he had scarcely awakened when he saw Lord Tennyson sitting at the foot of his bed. 'How are you this morning, Irving?' he inquired, anxiously. 'Very well indeed,' was his guest's reply. 'Are you?' came the response, with just a tinge of doubt in the tones of the voice. 'You drank a lot of port last night.'

Posing a Critic.

"HENLEY, for all the valorous spirit that was in him, was not always proof against sudden attack. One night when we were gathered at the Savile after some public dinner where we had all been present, Irving was of the party. Irving had a trick of waiting for his foe, and on this particular occasion, as I recall it, he was chafing under a criticism which had been delivered by Henley upon his impersonation of Macbeth. Henley appeared to be well aware that the matter in difference between them would come under discussion before the evening was ended, and was obviously ready with all the destructive weapons that were arrayed in his critical armoury. But quick and vigilant as he was as a fighting force, he nevertheless proved himself unready for the kind of attack which Irving had designed. Very quietly and almost deferentially the actor came to his point. After much genial interchange of cordial sentiment on one side and the other, Irving suddenly pounced upon his man.

"'I NOTICE,' he said, speaking to Henley in that tone of reverie which with him always concealed an imminent blow, 'that you do not approve of my conception of Macbeth. Tell me now, for I should be interested to hear it, how would you play Macbeth if you were called upon to present the character on the stage? What is your conception?' Henley was hardly prepared for such an invitation, and as we sat in expectation of what he would have to say, it was easy to see that the critic's destructive method, which at that time was uppermost in him, could not suddenly readjust itself to the task of offering any coherent appreciation of the character which Irving, according to his allegation, had misinterpreted.'

Sarah's Sentiments.

"WHEN Sarah Bernhardt was in London she was a constant guest at Irving's little suppers at the Lyceum, where she evinced the warmest admiration for the genius of Miss Ellen Terry. One evening, when Miss Terry was protesting that she was no longer young enough to undertake some rôle that Irving was pressing her to interpret, Sarah leant across the table and said, 'My dearling, there are two peoples who shall never be old—you and me.'

Sardou in England.

"I AM sincerely sorry to hear of Sardou's death," says Mr. Laurence Irving to a Daily Chronicle representative. "I well remember going over to see him three or four years ago about the translation of Dante. He used to see me every morning at seven o'clock. Describing to me how he used to map out his day, he said that from 8.30, when I left, until 11 he was occupied with the scene painters. From 11 to 12 he filled in with his own business, after which he allowed himself a brief half hour's rest. Two hours and a half he spent with the musicians, going over the whole programme of details. He filled in the rest of the afternoon seeing Sarah Bernhardt about a new play he was writing, and then at dinner I saw him again. During dinner he talked the whole time, brilliantly and in the most amusing strain. Sardou would have made a tremendously great actor. He did not look at all a powerful man, or one able to stand the severe strain which he put upon himself. A curious point which I noticed about him was the marked resemblance he bore to my father in the upper part of his face, whilst his mouth and chin was that of Wagner. He was Napoleonic in his arbitrariness, whilst his conversation was undoubtedly stamped with the impress of Voltaire."

A Large Amount.

"THERE was once a well-known actor living in Liverpool," writes Mr. Butler Stanhope. "We will call him the 'Lark.' He was always dressed in a black frock coat, well worn and greasy, a pair of dark trousers very much frayed at the bottoms, but always well brushed and kept as neat as possible. His collar and cuffs were always of the cleanest, but well worn at the edges, and if his boots were patched, they always were nicely polished. He was continually getting into scrapes, but with his usual smiling, easy-going nature and bonhomie he got out of them again. He was once entrusted with the part of a foreign Count in a new piece; and he had to tell an old gentleman that he was commissioned to give him five thousand pounds which he—the 'Lark'—had in his breast pocket. The audience simply roared at the idea of the actor, in his present get-up, having five thousand pounds, for he had been to the wardrobe keeper and got a military braided coat, much too large, and a striped pair of trousers greatly the worse for wear. This rather nettled the 'Lark,' who drew himself up and said, 'Ay, you may laugh! But I have five thousand pounds here in my pockets, and it's all in coppers."

Miss Terry's Escape.

"'KING ARTHUR' was produced under conditions that were exceptionally trying. At one of the rehearsals, as Arthur Sullivan and I stood upon the stage listening to his setting of the 'May Song,' the high platform upon which Queen Guinevere and her maids were standing suddenly gave way, and to our horror fell with a crash to the stage. For the moment we thought that some grave disaster must have occurred, but with sudden instinct Miss Terry had flung herself prone upon the pedestal where she had been standing, and escaped with nothing more serious than a few bruises."

"THE BUILDER OF BRIDGES."

Play, in Four Acts, by Alfred Sutro, produced at the St. James's Theatre on Wednesday, Nov. 11.

Edward Thursfield ....MR. GEORGE ALEXANDER
Arnold Faringay .....MR. DAWSON MILWARD
Walter Gresham ....MR. E. HARCOURT WILLIAMS
Sir Henry Killick .....MR. WILLIAM FARREN

Minnie .....MISS DORA SEVENING

Considering the habitual unpunctuality of a large number of first-nighters, it was, perhaps, a matter for congratulation that the earlier part of the first act of The Builder of Bridges was chiefly occupied in exposition. Only when the usual disturbances in the stalls had subsided was it possible to inform oneself that Arnold Faringay, an engineer in the office of Sir Henry Killick and Partners, had embezzled the money of the firm to the extent of several thousands, and was in imminent danger of arrest and imprisonment. His sister Dorothy, who adores him, has determined to save him; and though she is engaged to a showy and sentimental young man named Walter Gresham, she has gone to an hotel at St. Moritz purposely to bewitch a prominent member of the firm, Edward Thursfield, who has just returned from big bridge-building abroad. She has completely succeeded in her project. Not only, however, did she fascinate the engineer; she fell in love with him at first sight herself. Hence arise many misunderstandings. At first Dorothy intended to get Thursfield to make good the deficit, and then to throw him over; but her growing love for him makes the task difficult. She has already applied to the wordy but ineffectual Walter for the three thousand pounds needed to make good her brother's embezzlement; but he has refused, with plausible protestations. Faringay confesses his theft to another member of the firm, Peter Holland; and Thursfield at once decides to pay the money out of his own pocket with most of the savings of his life. As his reward he has the gratitude of Dorothy, who tells him he may call on her next day, when she will give him her answer as to whether she will marry him.

Dorothy, since seeing Thursfield, has grown to loathe her bond to Gresham, but has not been able to face the thought of his distress if she broke it off. She determines to obtain the money from him—he does not know of Faringay's theft—and she again begs him very earnestly to let her have it. The young man still makes excuses and objections, on which Dorothy breaks off their engagement, and tells him not to call on her again. Having got rid of the old love, she receives the new one cordially; and Thursfield is just sitting down to tea with the family as Dolly's fiancé when in bursts Gresham with promises to pay the money and much violent eloquence. This, of course, upsets all Dorothy's arrangements. Thursfield, severely indignant at the discovery of the concealment and trickery that have been going on, coldly leaves her, after a few calm but well-chosen words; and she is too much overpowered by the sense of her duplicity to speak a word in her defence.

In the last act Thursfield is going out to Rhodesia, and is left alone in his office, to which Dorothy comes at dead of night to give him an explanation. She tells him that she loved him from the time they met; and, convinced on that essential point, he takes her in his arms, and the curtain falls.

The story is handled with Mr. Alfred Sutro's usual skill; and the scenes between the engineers and the whole business of the office of Sir Henry Killick and Partners are admirably managed. The play is well written, and the interest is poignant, thrilling, and intense.

The Builder of Bridges gave opportunity for some very good acting by the company. Mr. George Alexander as Edward Thursfield had one of those characters of reserved force and deep resolute energy in which he excels. In the earlier acts, while Thursfield's power is still restrained, Mr. Alexander already gave an idea of the steady and strenuous purpose of the engineer; and in the second, in the scenes between Thursfield and Faringay, he acted with deep humanity and hearty manliness. It was, however, in the third act that Mr. Alexander found his most complete success. The time during which he was on the stage was short; but he managed to compress into it an immense amount of tense expression. The bitter suffering which underlay the engineer's stern self-control was made evident; and the strength with which he grasped the situation was shown, as it could only be shown, by an actor of Mr. Alexander's authority, ability, and experience. In the last act he had the ungrateful task of depicting a man who repels a woman's advances; and he tackled the difficulty boldly and with the best results. Altogether, it may be said of the part of Edward Thursfield that it was peculiarly fitted to Mr. Alexander's style and idiosyncrasy, and that it demanded no less an exponent for its complete demonstration. Mr. Dawson Milward was very happily selected to embody Arnold Faringay, a character of some complexity. Mr. Milward kept the tone of his performance quiet and low, except in the third act, when Faringay indulges in one savage and bitter burst of self-reproach. Here Mr. Milward showed that the smoothness of his style was not incompatible with emotional power. A very artistic representation of Walter Gresham was supplied by Mr. E. Harcourt Williams. Exactly the right note was hit; and Mr. Williams deserves warm praise for the tact with which, while avoiding exaggeration, he suggested very clearly the unreal ring of the effusive, but only half-sincere sentiment of the flamboyant youth. Mr. Williams was personally suited to the part, which could hardly have been better played. A fine, broad, bold, and vigorous rendering of the rôle of Sir Henry Killick was supplied by Mr. William Farren, whose manner and make-up as the irascible but affectionate old "Chief" were admirable. The embodiment stood out in its rugged power as an excellent example of the excellences of the old school of acting. It was a noble stage portrait, and one to be remembered. Mr. E. Vivian Reynolds was completely successful in his performance as Peter Holland. Its absolute unconsciousness, its concentration on the business of the scene, and its acute alertness made the rendering worthy of the warmest praise. It was effective from its very naturalness and unobtrusiveness; and the make-up was very neat and in genious. Miss Irene Vanbrugh, in her rôle of Dorothy Faringay, had to win back the good opinion of the audience which had been lost on the announcement of Dorothy Faringay's premeditated treachery; and, by her sensitive and highly-strung acting she succeeded in her most difficult task, the pathos of the woman's utter dejection in the later acts being very touching and affecting. Miss Vanbrugh was particularly successful in the scenes of quick nervous anxiety which were so frequent in the part; and her dramatic activity kept the audience in a state of unflagging excitement while she was on the stage. It was a trying task, loyally attacked and completely conquered by the perseverance and ability of the artist. Miss Florence Haydon was unimpeachably easy and agreeable as the "harmless necessary" Aunt, and Miss Babara Hannay contributed a crisp and neat bit of acting as the smart typewriter, Miss Closson, Miss Dora Sevening doing intelligent work as Minnie. The scenery by Mr. Raphael was excellent, the engineer's office being particularly realistic and well arranged, and the Temple Chambers wonderfully built up. The Builder of Bridges had an enthusiastic reception, and will doubtless add another to the list of Mr. Alexander's successes at the St. James's.

"THE BACCHAE" OF EURIPIDES.

Pentheus, son of Echion and Agâve, was king of Thebes in Bœotia. His refusal to acknowledge the divinity of Bacchus was attended with the most fatal consequences. He forbad his subjects to pay adoration to this new god; and when the Theban women had gone out of the city to celebrate the orgies of Bacchus, Pentheus, apprised of the debauchery which attended the solemnity, ordered the god himself, who conducted the religious multitude, to be seized. His orders were obeyed with reluctance, but when the doors of the prison in which Bacchus had been confined, opened of their own accord, Pentheus became more irritated, and commanded his soldiers to destroy the whole band of the bacchanals. This, however, was not executed, for Bacchus inspired the monarch with the ardent desire of seeing the celebration of the orgies. Accordingly he hid himself in a wood on mount Cithæron, from whence he could see all the ceremonies unperceived. But here his curiosity soon proved fatal, he was descried by the bacchanals, and they all rushed upon him. His mother was the first who attacked him, and her example was instantly followed by her two sisters, Ino and Autonoe, and his body was torn to pieces. Euripides introduces Bacchus among his priestesses, when Pentheus was put to death; but Ovid, who relates the whole in the same manner, differs from the Greek poet only in saying that not Bacchus himself but one of his priests were present. The tree on which the bacchanals found Pentheus was cut down by the Corinthians, by order of the oracle, and with it two statues of the god of wine were made, and placed in the forum.

The above interesting information is supplied by Lempriere, who also reminds us that the Bacchæ was one of Euripides posthumous works. The play has been done into English rhyming verse by Mr. Gilbert Murray in a manner which leaves no room for adverse criticism. It is a masterly bit of literary workmanship. The production at the Court Theatre on Tuesday afternoon, under the management of Mr. A. E. Drinkwater, was intelligent and artistic. The acting was excellent all round; and the stage management remarkably effective, considering the limits of the Court stage. Miss Lillah McCarthy played Dionysus with her usual thoughtful delicacy and firm refinement, delivering the lines allotted to the god with excellent inflexion and emphasis, and maintaining the proper sense of supernatural elevation. Miss McCarthy's symmetrical figure was picturesquely displayed on a pedestal at the close of the piece, when she made a pretty "living picture." Mr. Esmé Percy played Pentheus with admirable energy and vigour. He delivered the lines allotted to the indignant monarch in strong and spirited style, and personally reproduced a fine type of ancient Greek virility. His performance gave weight and contrast to what was otherwise a rather inactive drama. Mr. R. A. Beaton put plenty of plaintive dignity into his impersonation of Cadmus; and Mr. William Fazan's elocution and bearing as the aged Prophet Teiresias were excellent. Miss Winifred Mayo was an expressive Agâve. Mr. George Ellis enacted the Soldier of the Guard ably; and Mr. Anstey rendered with praiseworthy distinctness and endurance the long and trying descriptive speech of the Messenger. Mr. Sivori Levey was commendable as the Herdsman; and Miss Edith Rhys was a pleasing and graceful Maiden. The chorus was well supplied by Miss Juliet Hardinge, Miss Florence McHardy, and Miss Helen Macdonald, whose sonorous utterances gave intermittent solemnity to the proceedings. Miss Maie Hoey, Miss Rubini, and Miss Ruth Bower were agile and supple dancers, and their evolutions had evidently been carefully rehearsed under the direction of Miss Hoey. The costumes, designed and made by Miss Jennie Moore, were most artistic, the dress of Pentheus being especially handsome; and the mounting, though simple, was sufficient. The net profits of the performance, which was under the direction of Mr. William Poel, were devoted to the Egypt Exploration Fund.

Society Comedy, in Four Acts, by Mrs. Frank Wright and Mrs. Caleb Porter, produced at a Matinée at the Court Theatre on Thursday, Nov. 12.

The pretty play which Mr. Frank Cooper "submitted" to a friendly audience at the Court Theatre on Thursday afternoon is out of the question as an acting drama; but there is so much neat and pleasant writing in it, it shows so much quiet observation and such a nice sense of social atmosphere that the authoresses would probably produce practicable results if they took into their councils someone acquainted with the requirements of the stage. The piece is very naïvely constructed, and the story is simplicity itself. The scene of the first act is a riverside hotel, where Colonel James and his daughter Mignon are staying. The Colonel is a gouty old campaigner, who, after recent extravagance in Monte Carlo and Paris, finds the necessity of retrenchment. A motor belonging to Lord Baintree, a much-admired but elderly peer, breaks down near the hotel, and his lordship and his intimate friend, Lady Dereham, stay long enough at the inn to enable Baintree to "remark" Mignon, and to manœuvre Lady Dereham into inviting the young girl to her country house, much to the distress of the penniless young Jim Travers, between whom and Mignon a boy-and-girl engagement exists.

In the second act Mignon goes down to Dereham Court, and Lord Baintree opens a flirtation with her. This act is merely anecdotic, and only lasts for a few minutes. Mignon challenges Baintree to run a race on the lawn, and he kisses her. 'He's lost his head!" cries Lady Dereham jealously. "No," says her friend Mrs. Blaine, "he's only lost his heart!"

In the next act Mignon loses £100 at bridge, which Baintree pays for her, through the medium of a fashionable dressmaker, the Hon. Mrs. Desmond. There is a long and painful scene between Lady Dereham and her beloved Baintree when she discovers that he intends to marry Mignon. Jim Travers calls at Dereham Court, finds Mignon indifferent to him, and breaks off the engagement; and Baintree proposes to the girl, and is readily accepted. There is a great deal in the play which, received in a cynical spirit, would be humorous; but we cannot credit the authoresses with intentional irony: they evidently take their story quite seriously. A Bridge Tangle was dressed, acted, and mounted a great deal better than its intrinsic merit deserved, Miss Gertrude Kingston distinguishing herself by a brilliant study of a grande amoureuse in the toils of Cupid which would have been memorably effective in a really dramatic piece. The "moods and tenses" of the type were very cleverly suggested. That accomplished actress Miss Granville played a society milliner very acutely and cleverly; and Miss Claire Hamilton treated with a light and firm touch the little rôle of Mrs. Blaine. Mr. Frank Cooper made Lord Baintree as solid and as insinuating as the part required, and gave an admirably balanced and most artistic performance; and Mr. Arthur Wontner's Jim Travers was a natural and ingenious embodiment of shy and affectionate youth. Mr. Charles Goodhart contributed a sharp and emphatic interpretation of the character of Colonel James; and the stage was gracefully and intelligently furnished by personages represented by Mr. Max Leeds, Mr. S. A. Cookson, and Miss Violet K. Cooper. Mr. J. Willes was a blameless butler; and Mr. Edward Ferris was acceptable as the neutral husband, Sir Charles Dereham. Miss Phyllis Embury's Mignon was the essence of sweet ingenuousness and fresh and delicate beauty; and her artless innocence was very winning and charming. Mr. Fred Conyers deserves a word of praise for his careful stage management, the piece going quite smoothly throughout.

Irving's Salary.

"IT was on one evening during the first rendering of The Bells," says Mr. Comyns Carr in "Some Early Victorians," that I found myself seated there in company with a few genial spirits including Henry Montague, Toole, and Tom Thorne, when we noticed that Irving's manager, Mr. Bateman, had entered and was gazing round the room as though in search of someone he had appointed to meet. It occurred at once to the mischievous spirit of Toole to turn the occasion to account. In a whispered sentence he made the rest of us co-conspirators in the little drama he had suddenly devised, and as Mr. Bateman, still scanning the visitors assembled, advanced from box to box, he and Montague, in tones designedly pitched so that all might hear, began an animated discussion as to Irving's rightful claims to a larger salary than he was at that time receiving.

"I BELIEVE, in fact, that Irving's remuneration was something like £15 a week, which represented a substantial advance upon the payment he had received during his engagement for The Two Roses at the Vaudeville Theatre; but Montague and Toole vied with one another like competing bidders at an auction in loud proclaim of his larger worth. '£15 a week!' said Toole 'Why, he's worth £20 at any rate!' '£20!' retorted Montague. 'Nonsense! He's worth £30 if he's worth a penny!' And then Thorne, topping Montague, said he would be perfectly willing to give him £40 if he would return to the Vaudeville; and as the voices grew louder in the increasing estimate of Irving's value, Bateman, attracted by the discussion, drew nearer and nearer to the box in which we sat, until at last, leaning with his elbows upon the mahogany partition, he leant forward with lowering brows, no longer able to contain the indignation which these comments had provoked. And then at last Toole, always incorrigible in humorous mischief, topped all previous bidders by the emphatic announcement that Henry Irving was worth £50 a week if he was worth a shilling, to which Bateman, now incensed beyond measure, retorted, 'Yes, and you are the scoundrels who would put him up to asking it.'

Oxenford's Experience.

"JOHN OXENFORD, when recalling to me some of his earlier experiences as dramatic critic of the Times, told me that he had very early learnt his lesson not to endeavour to intrude his own opinions into the columns of the Times. Near the beginning of his career he had indulged in some unfavourable comment upon the performance of the orchestra, which provoked an angry letter of remonstrance from the player of the trombone—a letter of remonstrance that in its turn called down a sharp rebuke upon the critic from the great editor, Mr. Delane. 'I wish it to be understood,' he curtly intimated to Oxenford, 'that the Times has no desire to be embroiled in controversy with trombone players.'

"THE BUILDERS."

A new and Original Play, in Three Acts, by Norah Keith, produced at the Criterion Theatre on Tuesday afternoon, Nov. 10.

Adrian White, K.C. .....MR. C. AUBREY SMITH
David Gilbert .....MR. A. E. GEORGE
Mrs. Cray .....MISS EVELYN D'ALROY
Celia White .....MISS MAUDE MILLETT
Edith Haines .....MISS VANE FEATHERSTON
Nini .....MISS DORIS WALKER
Lady Sarah Sparkes .....MRS. H. NYE CHART
The Hon. Mrs. Trent ..MISS IERNE FITZGERALD
James .....MR. HEATH HAVILAND
Perkins .....MISS HAVILAND

Miss Norah Keith has written a play that pulsates with humanity, and though it was presented on Tuesday afternoon to a critical and discriminating audience of hardened playgoers, it not only gripped and held their attention, but won their favour. As the text of her theme she quotes a passage from Beatrice Harraden's great novel "Ships that Pass in the Night":—"'I have long ceased to build my bridge,' the disagreeable man said. 'It is an almost unconscious process' she answered." The "builders" of the bridge in the play are Mrs. Adrian White—who by her absorption in the Women's Suffrage movement sinks the foundations; Adrian White, the famous K.C.; and his client, Mrs. Cray, whose gratitude he has earnt by his masterly speech in the Divorce Court, by which he had disposed of certain counter-charges preferred by the scoundrel of a husband against whom a decree nisi has been pronounced. The "bridge" threatens to become a via dolorosa for all three; for we readily discover that the K.C.'s sympathy has gone out to the unhappy petitioner, who is impelled for the sake of retaining possession of her child to undergo a distasteful ordeal of publicity. To Adrian she is a divinity. His mental comparison of the woman and the wife—the latter in a constant state of agitation, irritability, and unrest, the sequelæ of her brainy activities in the cause of political enfranchisement for women—can have but one result. He yearns for the sympathy of a nature whose every fibre vibrates with the sacred instincts of motherhood. The danger to his domestic peace is foreshadowed by his friend David Gilbert, a practising barrister, and when Mrs. Cray calls to express her heartfelt gratitude to the man who had so completely established her innocence, she does so with such touching sincerity that the barrister begins to take an affectionate interest in her future.

In the second act, three months after the divorce trial, we find Adrian at Mrs. Cray's cottage at Hampstead romping with Nini, the child, to whom he has become a devoted slave. It is evident that he is a constant visitor, but as yet his wife has not called. She, however, does so, not expecting to see her husband, whose presence is tactfully explained by his friend David Gilbert. David sees the drift of things, and appeals to Mrs. Cray to "destroy the bridge" by going out of the life of the man whose future has now become bound up in hers. She recognises her duty, and in the last act is preparing for her departure abroad when her packing is interrupted by Adrian. He passionately avows his love, and learns that it is returned. Her great resolve is weakened; but to carry out her determination to save Adrian from himself she declares that the counter-charges made by her husband were only too true. "Say that you lie" he cries in his despair; but the sacrifice has to be made, and the brave woman does not flinch. The wife had taken her to her arms and kissed her, and there is every hope, as the curtain falls, that Adrian will return to a wife awakened to a sense of duty and with a nobler outlook on life. A subsidiary interest is the amusing courtship by David Gilbert, the kindly cynic, of Mrs. Haines, whose nature is sweet and lovable. Miss Keith, in dealing with the Suffragist movement, is rather superficial, but a scene so powerful and tender as that in the last act between Adrian White and Mrs. Cray is rare even in the best dramatic work. It has the sure touch, and rings true in every line.

Miss Keith had the best possible aid to success in the very fine cast representing the piece. Mr. C. Aubrey Smith roused the enthusiasm of the house by his fine powerful treatment of the part of Adrian White, K.C., and he tackled the difficult situation in the last act with remarkable success. Miss Evelyn d'Alroy, a young actress of considerable charm, played with a rare depth of tenderness in the first scene between Mrs. Cray and her barrister champion, and she had completely won over the house at the end of the first act. Still, we were not prepared for the sustained power and wonderful truth to nature of her agitated and poignant sentences in the scene of parting in the last act. It was a triumph for the actress as well as the dramatist. Miss Maude Millett was more than equal to her responsibilities as Mrs. White, whose awakening to a sense of wifely duty was cleverly suggested by the actress. The scenes between Mr. A. E. George as David Gilbert and Miss Vane Featherston as Mrs. Haines are cleverly written, and were admirably played; and the slight comedy relief was also added to by Lady Sarah Sparkes, a character divertingly treated by Mrs. H. Nye Chart; and by the Hon. Mrs. Trent, in which Miss Ierne Fitzgerald most unmistakably scored. Miss Dora Walker played prettily as the child, and Miss Haviland and Mr. Heath Haviland lent adequate aid in minor characters. The play was produced for Miss Norah Keith by Mr. Charles Rock, who did excellently well.

Toole's Sense of Humour.

"TOOLE, on the death of his wife," says Mr. Comyns Carr, "asked me if I would drive with him to the funeral, and I called for him at his house in Maida Vale, where we sat silently side by side in the little room adjoining the hall awaiting the arrival of the carriage. The tears were slowly coursing down his cheek, and I knew that many painful memories were thronging his brain, for his son and his daughter had already passed away, and by this final loss the last link with his domestic life was severed. And yet suddenly, as we were sitting there, a smile flitted across his face, and a laughing light came into those affectionate brown eyes that only a moment before had been filled with tears. 'I don't know why it has come into my mind now, Joe,' he said; 'I suppose it ought not to, but I must tell you. I was having dinner once at Dumfries in a company of commercial travellers, and before the covers were removed the chairman rose and said, "Mr. Macfarlane, as you are nearest the window, perhaps you will ask God's blessing on this feast."'

THE L.C.C. AND AMUSEMENTS.

The usual weekly meeting of the London County Council was held on Tuesday at the County Hall, Spring Gardens, Mr. R. A. Robinson (chairman) presiding.

THE FRANCO-BRITISH EXHIBITION.

"The Council on Nov. 22, 1907, granted to Mr. Imre Kiralfy a provisional licence for music and dancing for the Franco-British Exhibition. The exhibition opened on May 14 last, when the arrangements were to some extent incomplete, and could not be considered altogether satisfactory from the point of view of public safety. We were consequently not in a position to advise the Council to confirm the licence, although at the same time we did not consider it necessary to recommend the prohibition of the opening of the exhibition, as the licensee gave us his assurance that any work required by the Council would be done without delay. In consequence of additions being continually made to the exhibits it was necessary to make repeated additions to the requirements. The arrangements may now be regarded as practically satisfactory, but some of the requirements originally made have been modified or waived on account of the special circumstances connected with the present exhibition, and the inauguration of an enterprise of such magnitude. The whole question will therefore have to be reconsidered if the buildings are used another year, so that the Council may be fully satisfied with the arrangements before the buildings are again opened to the public, and an intimation to this effect has already been given to the licensee. We recommend—That the provisional licence for music and dancing granted on Nov. 22, 1907, to Imre Kiralfy for the Franco-British Exhibition be confirmed; that notice of such confirmation be endorsed on the licence; and that the seal of the Council be affixed to such endorsement."

Mr. P. A. Harris moved that the recommendation be referred back. He had no hostility to the committee, but did so as a protest against the disgraceful scandals in relation to the lavatory accommodation provided by the exhibition authorities. The state of things which had existed had been a disgrace not only to London but to Great Britain and the Empire, especially as the exhibition was of an international character. He thought it was an unfortunate coincidence that the Medical Officer of Health for Hammersmith was also acting in a similar capacity for the exhibition, or, at any rate, for the large firm of caterers. He did not suggest that this gentleman had used his dual position for unworthy purposes, but the situation was an extremely awkward one, and one which, in the public interest, should not be allowed to continue. It was pure cant to say that the exhibition was simply for the benevolent purpose of welding England and France together, for it was in reality a money-making concern for many people, and should therefore be treated like any other establishment that came up for a licence.

Mr. H. H. Gordon seconded the amendment, pointing out that the exhibition had been carried on without a licence at all, and now it was closed the Council were asked to grant a full licence. That he regarded as a ridiculous position. The scandals with reference to the want of proper sanitary accommodation continued up to the very last, and throughout the whole time the exhibition remained open complaints were being received by the Public Health Committee. He could not help thinking that the Theatres Committee had been somewhat lax in carrying out their duties.

Mr. Easton hoped that the recommendation would not be taken back. No one anticipated there would be such a great attendance at the exhibition, and it was only in its early days that there was any deficiency in sanitary accommodation.

Sir John Benn was in favour of the amendment. He thought that the Council should make it clear that a certificate would not be given to the exhibition authorities unless there was a binding undertaking on their part that there would be provided free and ample accommodation for all workpeople engaged there.

Mr. Isidor Salmon denied that there was any truth in the suggestion that Messrs. J. Lyons and Co. had been guilty of increasing their dividends by making their staff pay for sanitary accommodation.

Mr. H. J. Greenwood, the chairman of the Theatres and Music Halls Committee, said it was a matter of some surprise to him that an endeavour should be made to attach a condition to the licence for an exhibition which was now over. He regretted that the report should have been presented so late, but that was due to the fact that his committee went on making requirements from time to time, and it was therefore impossible to bring up at an earlier stage anything in the nature of a complete report. With regard to the question of sanitary accommodation, he was inclined to think that there had been a great deal of exaggeration, although he did not suggest that at the earlier part of the exhibition there had not been a very great cause for complaint in that respect. Three reasons seemed to contribute to that result. In the first place, like many other parts of the exhibition, the sanitary work was incomplete at the opening; secondly, the attendants had not made themselves acquainted with the geography of the grounds; and thirdly, the places were not sufficiently indicated to be of full use to the public. In all large undertakings where the number of persons present varied from 5,000 to 380,000 a day it would be quite impossible for any management to provide sufficient accommodation for the days of great pressure. He believed that his committee were justified in thinking that the accommodation shown on the original plans would have been quite sufficient, but he was now prepared to admit that on certain days they had been wholly insufficient. His committee had taken steps to impress upon the licensee their determination to see all requirements in the future complied with, and in view of that he failed to see any advantage in discussing what was now past. When the new licence came before the Council sitting as the licensing authority on the 27th inst. there would be ample opportunity to take any action which might be necessary for the future.

The amendment was lost on a show of hands.

Sir J. Benn then moved as a further amendment to add to the licence for the last exhibition the words, "subject to a guarantee as to ample free accommodation for all employees being provided in the future."

The Hon. H. Johnstone seconded the amendment, which, on a division, was defeated by 65 votes to 46, and the recommendation of the committee was adopted.

PARKHURST THEATRE.

On the reception of the report of the Theatres and Music Halls Committee, the Rev. F. Hastings asked whether the chairman of the committee's attention had been drawn to the character of the cinematograph entertainments given on Sunday at the Parkhurst Theatre, Holloway-road.

Mr. Greenwod replied in the negative, but promised to have inquiries made with reference to the entertainments.

Foote, Garrick, and Johnson once went together to Bedlam. Johnson, who was much affected at the sight of so much human misery, withdrew to a corner to meditate, where he threw himself into so many strange attitudes, and drew his face into such odd shapes, that Foote whispered to Garrick to know "how they should contrive to get him out."

THE IRISH NATIONAL THEATRE.

The Gaelic League, writes Signor Mario Borsa in "The English Stage of To-day," was founded in 1893, and during the same period and the years succeeding it many other societies and institutions saw the light in Ireland, all animated by the common ambition of co-operating in the intellectual Renaissance of the country. In 1892 there was formed in Dublin the National Literary Society; in 1893 both the Irish Literary Society and the Irish Text Society, having as their object the revision and publication of Irish texts; and, finally, in 1899, there was founded the Irish Literary Theatre, which was afterwards transformed into the Irish National Theatre.

The first attempt, that of the Irish Literary Theatre, failed because the actors were English, and were wanting in intelligent sympathy both for their authors and their public. But in 1902 this institution, which owed its origin to the initiative of Yeats, Edward Martyn, and George Moore, was transformed into the Irish National Theatre. A talented Irish actor, Mr. W. Fay, gathered around him a company of Irish amateurs, and repeated with generous ardour and notable success the experiment made by Antoine with his Théatre Libre.

Its early stages were beset with difficulties. The Irish National Theatre, destined to give expression to the dramatic genius of the race, lacked a playhouse! This was a small matter. At first the company toured from town to town, playing in halls and private drawing-rooms, without either stage, scenery, or stage dresses. Yeats suggested one or two costumes which could be adapted to all the parts in all the historical plays. The actors had no stage experience. This also was a small matter! Since Racine wrote two of his most famous tragedies for schoolgirls, the youthful authors of the Celtic Renaissance might well write for amateurs.

This course they pursued for two years, until, in 1894, Miss Horniman, an Englishwoman and a friend of Ireland, undertook, at her own expense, the restoration of the old theatre of the Mechanics' Institute in Dublin, and made a present of it to the Society of the Irish National Theatre. The entire labour of restoration and decoration was undertaken by Irish craftsmen. The stained glass in the vestibule was the work of an Irishwoman, Miss Sarah Purser. The large brass frames were supplied from the Irish workshops at Youghal, and all the other accessories were the work of Irish hands.

Thus did Ireland obtain her national theatre. As to the repertory, as the result of four or five years' work it contains not less than forty plays, written by poets, men of letters, young girls, and even priests. These works are, for the most part, comedies or dramas in one act. Their dialogue is sound and true to nature, but their construction is usually crude, feeble, and primitive. Some of them are written and played in Gaelic, others in English. Their subjects vary, but their tone is always either serious or satirical. Some are of a political nature, and form part of the Nationalist propaganda, as, for instance, that written and played on the occasion of King Edward VII.'s visit to Ireland, and another dealing with the emigration problem. Those of the latter class are the least meritorious. Next come the tragedies and plays of a national and historical character, animated by the same patriotic spirit that inspired the dramatic work of G. B. Niccolini. There is no lack, also, of poetical and symbolical works, but the best are those which reproduce scenes and types of peasant life, such as the works of J. M. Synge. The latter are at once the most sincere, the most natural, the most original, and the most interesting, constituting as they do a species of perspective illustration in dialogue of Irish folk-lore.

Of a very different character from the English stage, this Irish National Theatre has no commercial aims or ambitions. It commenced its existence with a capital of forty pounds, and rubs along as best it can. Its object is not to amuse, but to educate. It appeals, not to the eye and the senses, but to the heart and the intellect. It aims at setting forth all the hollow irony and the melancholy sweetness, the dreams and the memories, the loves and the sorrows that diversify the lives of the people, for whom and by whom it first saw the light. In short, it aspires to be above all a pure expression of the noble and the beautiful.

Yeats thus defines his own æsthetic principles: "We have to write or find plays that will make the theatre a place of intellectual excitement—a place where the mind goes to be liberated" (from every other preoccupation). "If we are to do this, we must learn that beauty and truth are always justified of themselves, and that their creation is a greater service to our country than writing that compromises either in the seeming service of a cause. . . . Such plays will require, both in writers and audiences, a stronger feeling for beautiful and appropriate language than one finds in the ordinary theatre. St. Beuve has said that there is nothing immortal in literature except style, and it is precisely this sense of style, once common among us, that is hardest for us to recover. . . . But if we are to restore words to their sovereignity we must make speech even more important than gesture upon the stage. I have been told that I desire a monotonous chant; but that is not true. . . . An actor should understand how to so discriminate cadence from cadence, and to so cherish the musical lineaments of verse or prose that he delights the ear with a continually varied music. . . . We must simplify acting, especially in poetical drama, and in prose drama that is remote from real life. We must get rid of everything that is restless, everything that draws attention away from the sound of the voice, or from the few moments of intense expression, . . . we must from time to time substitute for the movements that the eye sees the nobler movements that the heart sees, the rhythmical movements that seem to flow up into the imagination from some deeper life than that of the individual soul. Just as it is necessary to simplify gesture that it may accompany speech without being its rival, it is necessary to simplify both the form and the colour of scenery and costume. As a rule the background should be but a single colour, so that the persons in the play, wherever they stand, may harmonise with it and preoccupy our attention. In other words, it should be thought out, not as one thinks out a landscape, but as if it were the background of a portrait. . . . Even when one has to represent trees or hills they should be treated in most cases decoratively, they should be little more than an unobtrusive pattern. There must be nothing unnecessary, nothing that will distract the attention from speech and movement. An art is always at its greatest when it is most human. Greek acting was great because it did everything with the voice, and modern acting may be great when it does everything with voice and movement. But an art which smothers these things with bad painting, with innumerable garish colours, with continual restless mimicries of the surface of life, is an art of fading humanity, a decaying art."

William Butler Yeats is not merely the æsthete of the new movement; he is its very soul and symbol.

Ireland has never possessed a poet who has revealed with greater truth, and at the same time with greater discretion, her secret and intimate charm—that mournful longing for the indefinite outside the vision of this world, that painful groping after all that is beyond expression by word or deed, that invincible disdain of reality which finds an outlet either in irony—which signifies looking at things from a superior height, or in a dream—which means not looking at them at all! "In the dim kingdom there is a great abundance of all excellent things. There is more love there than upon the earth; there is more dancing there than upon the earth; there is more treasure there than upon the earth. In the beginning the earth was perhaps made to fulfil the desire of man, but now it has got old and fallen into decay. What wonder if we try and pilfer the treasures of that other kingdom!"

BUILDING A DRAMA.

A drama, like a house, is builded, writes Mr. William H. Fleming in "Shakespeare's Plots." What are the laws of its construction?

The laws which govern the construction of a drama are not empirical, capricious. They are not the dictum of any man. Like the laws which govern the material world, the motion of a star, the growth of a flower, a bird, they are natural. They inhere in the nature of a drama, and in the nature of the human mind which creates the drama, and which understands and appreciates it when it is read or acted. They are, as Pope says:—

"Those rules of old discover'd, not devised,
Are Nature still, but Nature methodis'd."

The artist does not create his materials. For these he goes to the great storehouse, Nature. The architect, sculptor, obtain marble from the quarry, out of which the former creates a cathedral, the latter a statue. The painter uses pigments with which he portrays the varying moods of landscape, ocean, man. The musician who creates beauty born of sound imitates the tones of winds, waters, the singing of birds, the sob of the child, the shout of the man. The dramatic poet portrays the experiences of men as recorded in histories, legends, stories. The originality of the artist is not in the creation of the materials he uses, but in the selection and use made of them.

To apply this fact to a drama, and to Shakespeare as an example of dramatists, with the possible exception of three plays—The Tempest, A Midsummer Night's Dream, Love's Labour Lost—Shakespeare did not invent the stories he dramatised. His plays belong to the romantic drama. Sciolists have therefore said he was not original. Is this opinion well founded? What is originality in art-production? "But, in general," is the opinion on this subject of the great poet of the Restoration, "the employment of a poet is like that of a curious gunsmith, or watchmaker; the iron or silver is not his own; but they are the least part of that which gives the value; the price lies wholly in the workmanship." Originality "may be defined," says Newman, "as the power of abstracting for one's self, and is in thought what strength of mind is in action." Walter Savage Landor says: "Creativeness may work upon old materials; a new world may spring from an old one." With this dictum Morley concurs: "As high a degree of originality may be shown in transformation as in invention, as Molière and Shakespeare have proved in the region of dramatic art." In his "Essay on Walton" Lowell asserts that Walton did not open new paths to thought or new vistas to imagination, but that he suffused whatever he wrote with his own individuality. "This constitutes literary originality. Whatever entered his mind or memory came forth again plus Izaak Walton." On this subject nothing more forceful has been written than the words of Professor Royce:—

"As a fact, originality and imitation are not in the least opposed, but are, in healthy cases, absolutely correlative and inseparable processes, so that you cannot be truly original in any direction unless you imitate, and cannot imitate effectively, worthily, admirably, unless you imitate in original fashions The greatest thinker, artist, or prophet is merely a man who imitates inimitably something in the highest degree worthy of his imitation."

The dramatist does not invent all of the incidents used in his plays. Æschylus said his dramas were but "dry scraps from the great banquets of Homer." The sculptor does not invent his subject, e.g., Laocoön; nor does the painter, e.g., The Madonna. An enormous receptive and assimilative power is a characteristic of genius. As the life within the seed appropriates nourishment from the earth, light, atmosphere, and grows into a lovely flower, so Shakespeare appropriated stories, histories, old plays, and by his creative genius produced from them his dramas. To speak metaphorically, the base metal he found in Plutarch, Boccaccio, Holinshed, the Gesta Romanorum, is transmuted by him into the pure gold of his Roman plays, his delightful comedies, his great tragedies. And, so doing, he, like other artists, is original. Each is a creator. Each, ont of material which he has borrowed, creates the work of Art, putting into it his own thoughts, emotions, life. Each

"Makes new hopes shine through the flesh they fray,
New fears aggrandise the rags and tatters:
To bring the invisible full into play."

In doing this Shakespeare exercised the primal faculty of the artist, viz., the power of artistic selection. It is this faculty which enables the dramatist to perceive the capabilities of his material; to select those incidents, those characters, which are suitable to representation on the stage.

Only certain actions, certain characters, admit of dramatic treatment. Not only the life, but also the form of a poem, is contained in the subject-matter. The form in which a poem is written is to the thought and emotion of the poem, to its life, what a man's body is to his mind and spirit. When Milton began to write "Paradise Lost" he put it in the dramatic form as a Miracle Play. He modelled it after the Greek drama, with a chorus. He wrote part of the poem in this form. Finally, however, as the result of long meditation and fresh inspiration, he was convinced his subject was not dramatic, but epic. He therefore changed the form of his poem, and made it not a drama, but an epic.

1. It must have a theme, e.g., ambition, love,
2. It must be such as can be imitated by action, for a drama is imitation by means of action.
3. It must be probable.
4. It must be organic, i.e., every detail, every incident must be in vital connection with the Main Action
5. The characters must be typical.

Having selected his subject, the dramatist proceeds to outline his Plot or scheme of action.

Aristotle considered Plot the supreme element in tragedy. He calls it "the final aim," "the soul," "the central principle" of tragedy. Plot is design. It is the skilful arrangement of incidents, of actions, by means of which the thoughts and emotions of the dramatis personæ are expressed, and those of the spectators are appealed to. The architect takes the blocks of white marble, and out of them, by means of his plan or design, which is in strict accordance with the laws of beauty, constructs the grand cathedral. Likewise the dramatist takes individual actions, and by skilful use of them, by means of Plot or design, constructs the great drama. The beauty, the grandeur, of the cathedral is not in the marble, but in the plan; that of a drama is not in the incidents, but in the Plot, by means of which they are artistically fused.

IRVING AND THE CRITICS.

Irving's popularity, says Mr. Austin Brereton, in his "Life of Henry Irving," was unbounded in the provinces as well as in London, and his fame was world-wide. But he was subject to more petty annoyance in the way of cruel caricature by pen and pencil, in pictures and in printed matter, than any other actor who has ever lived. He had patience and he endured, until at last he attained a position in public estimation which was absolutely unassailable. Even with his death, the attacks upon his acting did not cease. He despised the majority of the small-minded people who could not see his point of view because it was not their own, and he treated the writers with the contempt which they deserved. He respected criticism which was sincere and decorous. But he held in derision anything that was either cruel in intention or in effect. When it touched his honour as a man—as in the Fun libel—he took action. When his acting was the only concern, he could afford to let time settle the account. For instance, the pamphlet which was industriously circulated when he was touring the country in 1877 only assailed his acting, and, for this reason, his hands were tied. But if such an effusion were perpetrated in the present time—granted that a publisher could be found to take the risk of issuing it—the object of its attack would, in all probability, seek the protection of the law. It was issued anonymously, in a brown paper cover, with a cruel caricature of Irving as Mathias outside. It was called "a criticism, with ten illustrations." Its "criticism" was simply an onslaught upon Irving the actor, and its illustrations were caricatures which were all the more hurtful because they were so ingenious. Some six years later, one of the authors, Mr. William Archer, recanted—in part—for some of his remarks in this brochure; his co-author was the late Robert William Lowe, subsequently a great student of English dramatic literature, an authority on the history of the stage, and, personally, a kind and delightful companion. The young men—Mr. Archer was only twenty-one—meant no harm but such skits as this have power to wound and should not be indulged in lightly.

Irving's great offence, in the eyes of these young writers, seems to have lain in the fact that he was not "a heaven-born actor like Salvini," and that he did not slavishly follow tradition. After an attempt to explain his great position with the public, they indulged in a long essay in extenuation of their argument, which was "merely to prove that he is a very bad actor." There is no occasion to wade through the diatribe, but the opening statement may be quoted as an indication of the abuse—there is no other word for it—which follows: "No actor of this, or indeed of any other, age has been so much and so indiscriminately belauded as Mr. Henry Irving. For more than five years he has been the 'bright particular star' of the British dramatic firmament. Night after night has he filled the dingy old Lyceum, from the front row of the stalls to the back row of the gallery, with audiences which applauded every jerk, every spasm, every hysteric scream—we had almost said every convulsion—in which he chose to indulge. In the provinces he has met with the same success and the same laudation. Newspaper 'critics' have ransacked and exhausted their by no means limited vocabulary in the search for words in which to express his greatness. He is, we are told, the resuscitator of the past glories of the British drama, with the addition of new glories peculiarly his own. He is the 'interpreter of Shakespeare to the multitude,' the apostle of popular dramatic culture. Criticism has not been entirely silent, it is true, but its voice has been drowned in the plaudits of enthusiasm. Men of science, men of learning, poets, philosophers, vie with each other in singing his praises. Bishops eulogise him in after-dinner speeches; statesmen 'tap him on the shoulder while walking down Bond-street,' and introduce themselves to him with expressions of enthusiastic admiration; peeresses engage the stage-box night after night to gaze at his contortions." It is a curious thought that Irving could have been described as "one of the worst actors that ever trod the British stage" in so-called "leading characters" by these impetuous youths. It seems incredible that they could have written of him as possessing, among other disqualifications for the stage, "a face whose range of expression is very limited." Many people, even then, must have been surprised to learn that "abject terror, sarcasm, and frenzy are the only passions which Mr. Irving's features can adequately express." Again, "his figure utterly precludes the possibility of dignity, grace, or even ease: some of his most effective attitudes might well be taken for a representation of the last stage of Asiatic cholera—total collapse." As for the great scene with Ophelia, these superior young gentlemen could not find any merit in it. "We should be inclined to apply to it a shorter and uglier term"—than their own, "psychologically subtle"—"and call it vulgar." There was much more of the same sort of "criticism," and although the pamphlet was directed against Irving, the captious critics forgot that Miss Bateman was a woman and an artist, and thus dismissed her Lady Macbeth: "If the actual Lady Macbeth was in any way like Miss Bateman's representation of her, one cannot wonder that her unhappy husband was driven to the most horrible of crimes, only that suicide would certainly have been his first idea." They described Irving's Hamlet as "a weak-minded puppy," his Macbeth as "a Uriah Heep in chain armour," his Othello as an "infuriated Sepoy," and his Richard as "a cheap Mephistopheles." There is no occasion to quote further from an indiscreet pamphlet which, doubtless, its authors afterwards regretted.

THE GRANVILLE.

This cosy little hall enjoys well-deserved popularity in Walham Green, which is not to be wondered at, considering the excellence of the companies provided weekly by the enterprising management. This week the bill is headed by that versatile Scotch comedian Mr. Jack Lorimer, and the various songs he sings are artistically handled and most favourably received; Miss Madeline Rossiter is a most graceful dancer, and sings delightfully, one of her songs, "Dainty little Dora with the dimple," being most archly rendered. Mr. Will Johnson in aptly described as a lively comedian, and he has a good rousing number in "I'm going to see"; the Warsaw Brothers, in their comedy musical act, are worth going a long way to see; and Mr. Billy French is a real live wonder as an exponent of the art of wooden shoe dancing. Miss Agnes Asher sings very effectively, and she has a good descriptive song in "The man I mean." Bert Brantford is quaintly amusing, and his confidential style of ditty always meets with approval; Miss Adelaide Waldorf, a charming Australian vocalist, appears instead of the Five White Comedy Minstrels, and one of her songs, "A tiny seed of love," is well worth hearing.

America's great singer of coon songs, Miss Ella Shields, has some very goey items in her répertoire, the most successful being perhaps "Do you want any coal?" which instantly catches on. Mr. Ernie Mayne, "the Simple One," is better than ever, and his parody of "If those lips would only speak" is extremely mirth-provoking, which is not to be wondered at when Ernie's quaint delivery is taken into account. Some very good pictures are also shown, and some good music is played by the orchestra, under the skilful bâton of Mr. Frank Thomas; whilst Mr. Robert W. Duce is most assiduous and courteous in front of the house.

LITCHFIELD.—In memory of my darling mother, Emma Litchfield, who fell asleep Nov. 14, 1905. Dearly loved by her daughter Emma.

THE FRANK AYLMER CASE.

We append a letter from Mr. W. H. Wallis (of Tennyson and Wallis), who makes an appeal on behalf of Mr. Frank Aylmer (of the Two Sports). We are pleased to open the list, as Mr. Wallis desires.

"Olympia, Liverpool.
"Oct. 29, 1908.

"DEAR SIR,—By publishing this letter you will assist an urgent and very deserving case. Frank Aylmer, of the Two Sports, is now lying for the fourteenth week in Mercer's Hospital, Dublin, having undergone two operations to his foot. It will be several weeks before he can be out and about again, and his wife, his only comfort, is in lodgings in Dublin with strangers, waiting till he is able to be out and working again. He was always a good boy whenever the hat went round for anybody else, and therefore if you will only open a list for him I am sure a lot of us together can do him a little bit of good. I enclose you P.O.O. for £5 9s., with names of donors. I shall be sending some more by Saturday.

"Thanking you in anticipation, yours faithfully,
"W. H. WALLIS."

"YOU CANNOT DO BETTER than GARGLE with 'CONDY,'"

SIR MORELL MACKENZIE, M.D.
(The Eminent Throat Specialist).

A great many Eminent Physicians strongly recommend Condy's Remedial Fluid as the absolutely best remedy for Cuts, Burns, Wounds and Sores. (See Medical Reports in Book on Bottle).

LET FOCUS MEET FOCUS.

When the dazzling white focus is first turned on you are apt to feel a faltering in words or a catching in breath—very similar to that caused by the cold plunge.

If your nerves are already taut, it needs only a slight restlessness, dissatisfaction or inattention on the part of "the house" to complete your discomfiture.

AND THEN THE FIGHT BEGINS!—your pluck against your nerves, your mind against your body, and your sorely forlorn body against the germs of colds and disease floating in the vitiated atmosphere.

Why not let Hall's Wine do your fighting for you, and give you the ease, vivacity, and confidence so necessary to your part?

Hall's Wine is the focus of vital nutriment. It vitalises you as unmistakably as the stage focus illuminates you.

No more vivifying sustenance has ever been compounded for the ready restoration of worn blood.

Let focus meet focus.

Take Hall's Wine, and neither focus nor floodlight will trouble you, because you will have the new circulation, new strength, new energy which this Marvellous Restorative inevitably gives.

Colds and dangers of colds will be obliterated; nervousness, neurasthenia, and dyspepsia banished; inertia, apathy, slackness forgotten.

For when you take Hall's Wine, you increase your stores of vital nervous energy—the one and only prevention of disease.

Whether you be merely run down, or convalescing after sickness, Hall's Wine will tempt your palate, freshen your sleep, implant glowing health in your veins and joyful animation in your brain—vigorous, alert, enthusiastic, all-conquering strength.

Every time you take Hall's Wine you'll feel yet happier under the focus: until you take it, you'll wish you HAD, every time you are under the focus.

Hall's Wine

generates new reserves of healthy vitality which enable you to throw off and resist disease and to SUSTAIN THE MOST EXACTING PART AT YOUR TOP-LEVEL OF SUCCESS.

A glass of HALL'S WINE before "going on" will make an appreciable difference in the confident, resourceful, and convincing manner of your "playing."

The 3s. 6d. size for 3s. is now larger than ever. Try just one large bottle. It will do you more good than three bottles of any other tonic wine.

HALL'S WINE is sold by grocers and chemists with wine licences and by wine merchants everywhere; or direct from Hall's Wine, 865, Bow, London.

THE LAW OF COPYRIGHT

BY
ALBERT A. STRONG, LL.B. (Lond.).
Copyright confusion is, like the poor, always with us, and as it seems likely to remain so until at least the crack of doom, it were well for all concerned, or likely to be concerned, to take immediate steps to secure a copy of Mr. Albert A. Strong's new work, entitled "The Law of Copyright." Mr. Strong is already favourably known to the profession for his textbook on "Dramatic and Musical Law," which, like his latest production, is published at "The Era" Office. "The Law of Copyright for Actor and Composer" essays to make clear to the non-legal mind what is—or, in some cases what probably is—the law as to musical and dramatic copyright. The chapters on the Berne Convention and on the Chase Act, passed by the United States Congress last March, are full of interest.—Referee.

THE ERA

THE LATE VICTORIEN SARDOU.

The only fault of the French dramatist who died last Sunday was that he had outlived his day. SARDOU was a disciple of SCRIBE; but SCRIBE never attempted or pretended to "hold the mirror up to Nature." His plays were carefully constructed machines, made to run a certain time; and, as long as his vogue lasted, they certainly did so. SARDOU combined with SCRIBE's expert construction a veneer of reality that, for a time, was deceptive. His simulation of insight into humanity was so clever that the impression of it lasted long enough to influence an audience of his day for the hours that they remained in the theatre; and that answered the playwright's purpose with his contemporaries completely. We are too apt to forget how rapidly the hands of the theatrical clock move on; and how the "startling novelty" of to-day becomes the played-out effect of next season. This fact is well illustrated by the case of Nos Intimes. In this piece SARDOU revived the situation of the young wife with an elderly husband who is physically unattractive. The lover has been staying in the house, and the usual climax is at hand. Problem: how to save the worthy husband from disgrace and annoyance, and how to "cure" the wife of her tendency to infidelity. Nowadays the French dramatist would go to the root of the matter. The wife would take up her stand on broad philosophic grounds, and would argue the husband into subjection. He would possibly be persuaded to connive at his own shame; or the wife might experience one of those great convulsions of spirit which we hear of in connection with the Salvation Army. SARDOU shirked the serious side of the situation characteristically. He saved the wife from exposure by a kind of dramatic practical joke. She listens for the shot which she supposes is about to slay her would-be lover; and then, bang goes a gun outside, and the husband runs in carrying a fox which he has been staying up all night to shoot. It will hardly be believed, in these days of "daring" dénouements, that SCRIBE pronounced Nos Intimes "foul to a degree," and asked "what the drama was coming to." What would he have said had he been able to foresee some of the modern French plays?

SARDOU was the type and acme of the manufacturing dramatist. He had the sense of the theatre as it was understood in the early sixties. He had the art, so rare and so valuable, of knowing exactly how intelligent to be for any given purpose. He went just far enough into things and no farther. His construction was not a matter of exits and entrances, but a vision of a field perfectly laid out, of an idea divided into acts and subdivided into scenes, each taking its share in the advancing and assistance of the whole. A letter picked up on the sanded floor of a shop suggested to him a whole scheme of incident and intrigue; a scent served as a clue to a criminal. For, with SARDOU, the theatre always came first. Unfortunately for SARDOU's later years, the theatre of his old age was no longer the theatre of his youth. In his earlier days SARDOU was really, though it is difficult to realise it, a pioneer and an innovator. Compared with SCRIBE, indeed, he was a daring realist. He appears to have had no particular feelings, no individual convictions. His Rabagas was a special pleading for the rotten régime of the Second Empire, just as his Robespierre, intended for English audiences, gave the British conventional idea of the Revolutionist and the Reign of Terror. But art is a matter of technique almost as much as a question of imagination; and the line which divides the great craftsman from the great artist is a thin and vague one. SARDOU, besides knowing his trade perfectly, had an enormous industry and a passion for external realities. He revelled in archæological details; and his controversy as to whether forks were used in the Byzantine period was most interesting. There was always a basis of knowledge in his treatment of a period; and he took infinite pains with his accessories. Probably his most enduring works will be found to be his comedies.

It is very easy indeed to point out the decline and fall of SARDOU; as if he had not shared the fate of every theatrical luminary. The wonder was that he lasted so long; a result that was only attained by his remarkable power of adapting himself to the circumstances of the moment. If it comes to that, what about IBSEN, MAETERLINCK, and other authors whose faults certainly are not those of SARDOU? Where is IBSEN now? Is it not strange, remembering the "boom" that followed his introduction to English audiences, remembering the prophesies of his "financial success," not long, we were told, to be delayed, that he is already so entirely "laid on the shelf," as far as London is concerned? How is it that IBSEN-lovers and the "curious" cannot, in the whole year round, see a cycle of his plays performed in London? Is the "Master" as dead as all that? If so, SARDOU is certainly in no worse a plight as far as Great Britain is concerned. It was all very well for ZOLA to foam at the mouth in denouncing SARDOU's absurdities and imperfections; but what came of the portentous directions, and predictions, and layings down of the law in ZOLA's essay? Have actual results come up to realist expectations? Let us lay the earth reverently on the Great Constructionist. We have had too much of late of lame and straggling plots apologised for by brilliant eccentricities, of wild imagination and poor technique, of plays that are not plays at all, but merely "go-as-you-please" extravagances. There is no risk that we shall revert to the conventional and the mechanical view of drama. The danger is the other way; that we may forget that, first and foremost, a play must excel as a coherent entertainment of the stage, under penalty of extinction at the conclusion of the "craze" that at first obscured its defects.

"THE PRIEST OF THE TEMPLE" is being given at the Opera House, Treherbert. Mr. Chas. March's acting as Valerius is capable; Decius is admirably sustained by Mr. William Bradford; Præstantia, in the hands of Miss Una Lane, is a charming impersonation; and comedy of a vivacious kind is introduced by Spencer Allwood as Asquatus. Miss Ethel Crawford as Polita is effective.

AT the Alexandra Theatre, Widnes, Mr. T. Arthur Jones is presenting When Other Lips. Mr. T. Arthur Jones does sound work as Ted Daunton; Mr. Juan D'Alberti is a truculent Basil Cuningham; Mr. Cecil Raymond is sound as Tommy Neccles; Mr. Richard Webb has made a close study of the character of Duddle Topwash; Mr. Herbert Bentone is an amusing Phylocrates Jenkins; and Mr. Albert H. Clarke is well placed as Robert Lingley; the Jew of Mr. Dick Everton is better than the average; Mr. Robert Lawin handles the part of Sharkey with ability; Mr. Arthur A. Felton is a good Ginger; Miss Agnes Collier wins much sympathy by her capable acting as Octavia; Miss Lizzie Lennon as Kitty Topwash wins many laughs; and Miss Marie Daventry is a winning heroine.

"MR. BUCKSTONE has talents, Mr. Buckstone has humour, Mr. Buckstone has much waggishness, but Mr. Buckstone has no refinement," wrote a critic in 1862. "A double entendre lurks in each eye; his smirk is a hint of an unclean presence. The pit is always on the grin before him; but the boxes, whilst they applaud, are troubled lest the wag that sets them in a roar should commit himself. His voice is in perfect keeping with his person: it suggests a distillation; it seems to lazily flow from a mind charged with fat thoughts and unctuous conceits. He has the true low-comedy air in his walk and gesture; his face looks dry and red with long roasting before the footlights. He is the son of Mirth and Vulgarity. His mind is a machine which manufactures afresh the stuff it is fed on; what is wholesome and plain is reproduced in a new form, with a different colouring and an original aroma. The downright speaking of the old dramatists can never offend or shock when spoken by refined lips; but to such downright speaking Mr. Buckstone takes care to impart a meaning of his own, and makes plain speech a sort of intellectual perspective for the satyr who leers with dewy eyes upon the spectator, and whilst he forces him to laugh, compels him to despise the occasion of his merriment." No libel action followed.

"IN AN ARAB GARDEN."

Mahamoud .....MR. H. R. HIGNETT
Ramdan Ben Ramdan..MR. PERCY R. GOODYER
El Hadj Salah Ben Hassin .....MR. ROBT. WHYTE, JUN.
Abdallah Ben Attig ....MR. CHARLES TROODE
Ali .....MR. E. MATURIN
Messaouda .....MISS MONA HARRISON

Miss Gladys Ungar, the authoress of Mr. Sheridan, produced and favourably commented on some time ago at the Garrick Theatre, has given us a pleasing curtain-raiser, on somewhat novel lines, in In an Arab Garden. The only fault one need find with it is that it is rather too long, and the earlier part of the play could, with advantage, be considerably cut down. The scene is the house of Ramdan Ben Ramdan in Hammanet, near Tunis. Ramdan is an elderly lawyer, who some time previous to the period at which the play opens, had indicated to Messaouda, the beautiful daughter of a merchant, that he desires to make her his wife. But soon afterwards he appears to have repented his advance to the lady and withdrew his suit. Then a few months later he changes his mind, and now decides that he will really marry her. But there is a legal obstacle in that Ramdan having once slighted the girl by repudiating his proposal, has forfeited his right to again seek her hand. The astute lawyer, however, after much hard thinking, discovers a way out of his difficulty which he considers the law will permit. He will marry Messaouda to his gardener, Mahamoud, draw up a deed nullifying the marriage, which the gardener shall sign, and then he (Ramdan) will be able to claim his Messaouda for ever. To legalise the marriage Mahamoud and the girl must stay under the same roof for one night, and so Ramdan arranges to place them in different rooms in his own house. The young and good-looking gardener is in a very troubled state of mind. He had fallen in love with a lady with whom he was not acquainted, and he signs the document relinquishing his right to Messaouda, and accepts the bribe from Ramdan without realising that Messaouda and the unknown woman are the same. Ben Hassin, a patriarchal lawyer and a friend of Ramdan—the two, by the way, are preparing a history of the law since the time of Mahomet—ridicules Ramdan's pretended love affair. However, during the night Messaouda comes to the door of her sleeping apartment, and the poor gardener recognises in her the girl whom he had seen but once, and for whom his heart was yearning. The end of it is Ben Hassin tears up Ramdan's document, and Mahamoud and Messaouda walk slowly off through the garden together—their poverty is nothing—they have love!

Mr. H. R. Hignett acted with sincerity and feeling as Mahamoud, and Mr. Percy Goodyer furnished a really excellent study of the legal dotard, Ramdan. Miss Mona Harrison was quite delightful as Messaouda, and as her half-inebriated father, Mr. Charles Trood was seen in a clever bit of characterisation. Mr. Robert Whyte, jun., as Hassin, and Mr. E. Maturin as Ali (servant), also rendered good support. The playlet is beautifully mounted and the interior of Ramdan's house forms a very pretty scene.

AMUSEMENTS IN AUSTRALIA.

SYDNEY, OCT. 6.—Mme. Ada Crossley, singing better and with fuller voice than ever, is giving highly successful concerts under Mr. J. C. Williamson's direction at the Town Hall.

MR. J. C. WILLIAMSON removed Peter Pan last Thursday from the Royal stage, and revived Dorothy Vernon on the Saturday. Mr. Thomas Kingston is Sir John Manners; and Miss Tittell Brune again enacts Dorothy Vernon. The cast is most decidedly strengthened by the placing of Mrs. Robert Brough as Queen Elizabeth, the virago of English history; and Miss Emma Temple comes in very handy as Lady Vernon. The ill-fated Marie Stuart falls to Miss Nellie Calvin with anything but Calvinistic flavour. Mr. Maurice Dudley made Perkin Megister stand out in favourable prominence; and Mr. Gregan McMahon posed as Sir Malcolm Vernon most forcibly.

"THE MERRY WIDOW" is having phenomenal booking at Her Majesty's. On Wednesday afternoon Miss Ivy Scott most successfully replaced Miss Carrie Moore as Sonia. The reason for Carrie Moore's absence on Wednesday was that she was quietly married that morning to a young English sportsman, Mr. P. P. Bigwood. The next morning a writ was served on the bridegroom by an English lady, Miss Ivy Salvin, for breach of promise. The lady's solicitor also seized the Bigwood motor-car, which Miss Salvin says was bought with her money from the departing Governor-General, Lord Northcote, for 420 guineas. Miss Moore reappeared on the night of her bridal, and is still the Sonia, "a merry widow."

MESSRS. MEYNELL AND GUNN'S production of The Belle of Mayfair at the Criterion is a notable one. The cast is very strong, for, besides the established favourites, Miss Ruth Lincoln, who plays the Princess, Miss Essie Perrin (Pincott), Mr. Roland Bottomley (Raymond), Mr. Edwin Brett (Sir John), Mr. William Cromwell (Hugh Meredith), Mr. Tom Payne (Simpson), Mr. Arthur Appleby (Comte de Pierier), and Mr. Fred England (the Bishop), "the firm" has added a dainty, graceful actress in Miss Gracie Sinclaire, who is a charming Julie Chaldicott.

MR. FRANK THORNTON'S farewell season is fast drawing to a close, only four more nights remaining. These will see packed houses at the Criterion to enjoy the comedian's unique performance as Lord Babberley, in Charley's Aunt. We shall miss the utterly conscientious actor, who has given us so much wholesome fun, and our best wishes go with him whithersoever he goes.

THE Tivoli has Abdullah's Arabs as the greatest of the Harry Rickards attractions. The theatre, often half-full at curtain rise, is packed when these marvellous artists appear, and loud applause greets them every night. Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Meymott change their sketches, which are always attractive and well acted. The Barnard Family, Nellie Wilson, Tod Lowen, Little Gertie Cremer, Little Willie, Rochfort, and Hart, and Burt Shepard are in the bill; Miss Nita Leete, the rich-voiced contralto, is singing a new song by Mr. Bert Rache, the Tivoli conductor, entitled "Only to love you I live," with pictures to illustrate it.

MR. DUDLEY CLINTON died at Perth, Western Australia, on the 30th, and was buried in the Jewish Cemetery there. He came to Australia with Miss Nellie Stewart to play in Sweet Nell of Old Drury, toured America with that lady, and returned to Sydney engaged by Mr. J. C. Williamson.

"THE ANCIENT SUFFRAGETTE," a long while after Coleridge, is by Mrs. A. C. Helen Meredith, sister to Sir Robert Laurie Morant, K.C.B., Secretary to the Board of Education. Mrs. Meredith is also the author of The Taming of Venus, a poetical play, which she has sent to Mr. F. R. Benson for his perusal.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

BERLIN, THURSDAY, Nov. 12.—This work of the eminent playwright is not new, but it was a novelty to the majority of the audience. It was produced by the same management eight years ago at the Deutsches Theatre, and since then has not been performed here. The reception accorded it last week was most cordial, and Herr Hauptmann, who was present, had every reason to be gratified. Michael Kramer is an essentially German play: it is human, convincing, and frequently sentimental. The hero bears the name of the title. He is a painter and professor at a Royal School of Art. He is a hunchback and the reverse of handsome, but he is not embittered by his misfortune. Michael Kramer is a bit of a philosopher and a good deal of an amateur parson, and he talks like a book. His son Arnold has inherited his father's physical deformity, but not his beautiful soul. In a word, Arnold is a thorough-paced "bad lot," who rewards the goodness of his parents with dire ingratitude, who passes his time in doubtful "pubs" in low company, and whose untimely end we cannot deplore. The last act affords splendid scope to any actor of the name-part: in the tirade of the broken-hearted father there is much to move the most hardened playgoer. Herr Sauer gave the rôle in his best manner, which is saying a good deal, and his supporters were all admirable. It is very safe to prophesy a good number of performances.

THE Royal Schauspielhaus produced a new historical tragedy a few nights ago. It is by Christian Grabbes—an author who has written several similar plays—and bears the title of Kaiser Heinrich der Sechste. The five acts are very long, the whole play taking four good hours, so that—especially as the plot and its development are interesting to very few—the patience of the audience was exceedingly tried. One critic heads his notice with "Heinrich der Langweilige" (the bore). It is a lamentable fact that our one State theatre seldom produces any novelty that is not boring. The acting was excellent, and the mounting also; but it was an unnecessary expenditure of conscientious work all round.

"DER STOLZ DER STADT," a three-act comedy by Gustav Wied, has made a hit at the Luisen. It is one of the famous Danish writer's early works, and, though somewhat crude, is thoroughly entertaining. The "pride of the town" is Hans Seeport, a talented young painter, whose art studies have been paid for by the authorities of the small town, where Hans' father had unluckily gone bankrupt. The artist, covered with honours, returns to his native place, and horrifies the goody-goody citizens by bringing his model, the star of a travelling circus, with him. The lady lodges with Hans' landlady, and the town rises up in arms against the "immorality" of the thing. The now famous painter turns the tables upon his former patrons with a vengeance. He has discovered that his father's ruin was caused by the villainy of several of the town's magnates, and in a very strong scene he throws their evil deeds in their faces. Then he shakes off the dust of his native town for ever, and departs with his model. The grateful rôle of Hans Seeport was well acted by Herr Schneeweiss, and the remainder of the cast was satisfactory. The reception was so cordial that the manager was compelled to appear on behalf of the absent author.

AT the Schiller O. a "German play," in five acts by H. Lilieufein was produced with success last Saturday. It is entitled Der Schwarze Cavalier, and is of the fantastic order. The action passes during the Thirty Years' War in a solitary corner of Germany. The "Black Cavalier" is the Plague, who is invited to a wedding feast by a degraded soldier to be revenged upon the guests. There is also a witch in the piece and various other shady persons, and the whole has been put together with a good deal of dramatic talent.

"PELLEAS ET MELISANDE," a musical drama, in five acts and fifteen scenes, by Debussy, text by Maeterlinck, was the great event of the week at the Komische Oper. Director Gregor and his capital staff took every pains to make the work a success, and their efforts were not in vain. The opera has been heard in Germany before—in Dresden and Frankfort—but never under such good conditions. Cast, orchestra, and mounting were alike deserving of unstinted commendation.

MR. GEO. EDWARDES'S company is at the Theatre Royal, Torquay, in The Merry Widow. Miss Mysie Devine makes a charming and fascinating widow; Miss Ada Thomas does well as Natalie; an admirable representation of Frou-Frou is given by Miss Katie May, her dancing being much appreciated; Mr. Frank Greene takes the rôle of the Prince with success; and Mr. Fred Fowler provokes continuous merriment as Nisch.

AT the Theatre Royal, Tyldesley, His Sister's Honour is being presented this week by Mr. Evelyn A'Dell's company. Mr. Evelyn A'Dell is powerful and convincing as Richard Stanley; Sir Richard Redvers has a praiseworthy exponent in Mr. Walter Wilson; Mr. Edwin Clarke gives a successful portrayal of Dr. Godfrey; Mr. S. Verner is an efficient Police-constable Worthie; and Mr. Tom Armitage a humorous Timothy. Miss Flora Leslie fills the part of Dora Stanley in a capable manner; Miss Ethel Ashleigh does well as Ivy Merton; and Miss Maudie Vincent is a lively Maria.

IN the Football League, Second Division match, at Clapton this afternoon, Fulham will be represented by Skene, Charlton, Lindsay, Collins, Parsonage, Stuart, Millington, Dalrymple, Harrison, Brown, and Lipsham. The kick-off is at three o'clock. Fulham Reserves will oppose Norwich City in connection with the South-Eastern League, at Fulham this afternoon, when the home team will comprise Fryer, Harper, Leigh, Rogers, Waterson, J. J. Radnage, Threlfall, Freeman, Barton, Bradshaw, Duff. Kick-off, 2.45.

A WARM tribute to Sir Hubert Parry was paid by Sir Walter Parratt, the new Professor of Music at Oxford University, in the course of his inaugural lecture in the Sheldonian Theatre on Wednesday, the subject being "Appreciation in Music." After kindly reference to former professors, Sir Walter asked: What should he say about his dear friend and immediate predecessor, Sir Hubert Parry? He was so various. There was the country gentleman managing his estates with minute care and an attractive tinge of Socialism; the country magistrate who fined the offender five shillings, and probably rushed round to pay the fine himself; the ambitious motorist, the fearless yachtsman, the minor historian, the director of the Royal College of Music, where he was adored by the whole staff from the teachers to the office boy. There was the Professor of the University, whose questions were the very poetry of examination papers.

PARIS, Thursday, Nov. 12.—It is a chastened Maurice Donnay who revealed himself in his five-act play La Patronne, a severe, academical Donnay, applying the lash to the shoulders of mondains and mondaines. But in his zeal to punish vice the gifted playwright put on the black colour a little too thick, and thereby spoilt an otherwise fine picture. The curtain rises on a soirée at the house of the Sandrals. We see beautiful women in tasteful toilettes, distinguished-looking men—an "All-Paris," unprincipled, frivolous crowd. Sandral, a rich manufacturer, has engaged as secretary Robert Bayanne, a youth of about twenty, the nephew of Nelly, his wife. Nelly is no paragon of virtue. In fact, she has kept pace with the other ladies in her set; but the moment Robert comes to stay with them she becomes a different woman. Robert is inexperienced and naive; and her rôle is to watch over him with motherly care. Unfortunately she cannot prevent the youth from falling in love with Adrienne Destrié, a heartless coquette, and becoming that woman's lover. A year elapses. Adrienne calls on Nelly, and informs her that she has given Robert to understand that she has grown tired of him. But the boy takes things tragically, refuses to return her letters, and threatens to fight his rival. Nelly then takes Robert in hand. She patiently listens to the outpouring of his grief, and finally prevails upon him not to raise a scandal, and to return Adrienne's letters. Another year elapses. Adrienne takes it into her head to pay a visit to her victim Robert, a risky experiment that might have led to serious trouble, and after a violent scene the lady leaves in a great rage, with her dress slightly torn. But a new visitor is announced, Jacques Latrille, a "society commission agent," of whom Nelly says that he is not a gentleman, but a "gentle-muffle." Latrille knows that Robert is heavily in debt, and he tempts him to sell one of his employer's secrets. Sandral notices that his papers in his private room—to which only Robert has access—have been tampered with. He tells his wife that he suspects Robert, and on the eve of the youth's treachery being discovered, Nelly, his good angel, once more intervenes. She makes him confess that he took a few notes, but had not yet parted with the secret; and she impresses upon him the fact that Paris is fatal to him, and that he had better return to his mother in his native provincial town to clean his mind from all the dirt that has accumulated there. Excellent acting and many pretty women adorn the piece. Mme. Jeanne Granier was perfection itself; Mlle. Brésil, who only had to look lovely, gave every satisfaction in that respect; M. Lérand as a tipsy old scientist; M. Arquillière as the scheming Sandral; M. Joffre as a "society doctor," and M. Puylagarde as Robert all did splendid work.

IN L'Oreille fendue, M. Népoty's comedy now running at Antoine's, the rôle of Mme. Charmillon, created by Mlle. Marcilly, has been given to Mlle. Alice Barton, a talented young actress of Anglo-Saxon descent. Mlle. Barton, who not long ago made a very successful début at the Théâtre de l'Œuvre, has come quickly to the fore, and is fast becoming a great favourite with Paris audiences. The rôle of Mme. Charmillon—an American lady with a shady past, who, thanks to her millions, becomes engaged to Marc, a lieutenant, the son of a retired general—is by no means an easy one. But the clever artist came triumphantly through the ordeal, and scored immensely in the great scene between her and her fiancé's sister. Mlle. Barton, who speaks English fluently and imparts a peculiar charm to all she does, may be expected soon to make her appearance in one of the London theatres.

THE newspapers all over the world have brought lengthy notices on Victorien Sardou, the ablest master of stage-craft, who has just passed away at the age of seventy-seven. It, therefore, is not necessary for me to enlarge on M. Sardou's career. Sufficient to say that during half a century of incessant work he tried all styles, from farce to comedy and tragedy, even operetta and "fairy" plays. Many of these are forgotten, whilst others are likely to retain their hold on the masses. M. Sardou was successful from the very start; for his Famille Benoiton, produced in 1865, at the latter end of the Second Empire, proved such a gold-mine that out of the profits he bought his beautiful estate at Marly-le-Roi, near Paris. Many years ago I had occasion to introduce to M. Sardou an eminent English playwright who was anxious to have the great French dramatist's opinion on a new play to be brought out on a London stage. Sardou, in his usual blunt way, gave some excellent advice, for which my friend was extremely grateful. I wonder whether the eminent English playwright still remembers the incident.

THE plot of MM. Xanrof and Chancel's three-act operette S.A.R. produced at the Bouffes-Parisiens, for which M. Yvan Caryll supplied the music, is the same as that of Le Prince Consort, with which English playgoers are familiar. It will be remembered that Cyrill, the son of a reprobate old king dethroned by his subjects, marries the young Queen Sonia. Cyrill, however, is only Prince Consort, and is not allowed to interfere with State affairs. His position of a Royal companion is so humiliating that he is driven into open rebellion and gives the Queen a lesson which nearly leads to divorce. Fortunately, the young couple are very much in love, and they not only become reconciled, but Cyrill obtains the privileges which he claims, whilst Xenofa, Sonia's meddlesome, amorous aunt, marries the reprobate old king. M. Yvan Caryll's music is bright and melodious, but the public were a little disappointed, because it does not bear the typical English stamp which appeals so strongly to Parisians. "C'est joli, mais cela n'a pas le cachet Anglais," is the verdict of the majority of the critics. For all that, the work met with a decided success, and many couplets had the honour of an encore. Mlle. Deval as the elderly aunt was the "strong card" in the cast, and scored a tremendous success; M. Henri Defreyn, the happy possessor of a sweet tenor, was a manly Cyrill; and Mlle. Dumesnil presented a winsome Sonia. Special praise is also due to the orchestra and to its able conductor, M. Lassailly.

PRINCESS HENRY OF BATTENBERG and Princess Patricia of Connaught, with the Earl and Countess Beauchamp, were present at the performance of The Only Way at the Adelphi on Thursday.

MR. EDITOR.—SIR,—I notice in your last issue a report of Straight from the Shoulder, at Darlington, in which your correspondent mentions my name as playing Dr. Francis Bedford. I did not play the part at Darlington.—Your truly, MATTHEW BOULTON, Grand Theatre, Swansea, Nov. 10.

VARIETY GOSSIP.

MR. WALTER GIBBONS, Mr. H. Blackmore, and Little Tich have consented to act as committee members of Mr. Will Evans's proposed Sports Club. Mr. Arthur Lennard, Mr. and Mrs. George Foster, Mr. Arthur Godfrey, Miss Adele Levey, Mr. Phil Ray, Mr. Harry Masters, Mr. Chas. Reed, Mr. Harry Tate, Mr. Wilkie Bard, Mr. Geo. Arthurs, Mr. Sam Mayo, Mr. Edward Lewis, and Mr. Fred Wyndham have become members of the club.

THE directors of the Oxford have declared an interim divided at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum. The business at the favourite hall is enormous, and "standing room only" is the cry at the box office every evening.

"THE BOATSWAIN'S MATE," by W. W. Jacobs and Herbert C. Sargent, which, under the direction of T. V. Vaughan and John Lawson, was given as a sketch at the Tivoli, has returned to its original home, Wyndham's Theatre, where it is evoking roars of laughter nightly. It has been booked by Mr. Oswald Stoll for thirty-two weeks, and Mr. Walter Gibbons has secured it for eighteen.

THE position of musical adviser to the Moss and Stoll Amalgamation has been accepted by Mr. Alfred Dove, formerly musical director of the Lyceum, and recently London representative for Maurice E. Bandmann—a position that he has just resigned.

MR. ALFRED MOUL will present at the Alhambra on Monday Apaches and Grigolettes, introducing the sensational Apache dance from the Moulin Rouge, Paris, performed by M. Volbert and Mlle. Sylve. Another item will be the Ten Ji Troupe of Japanese magicians, who will give some wonderful juggling feats. On Wednesday evening the Australian football team were the guests of the Alhambra directors.

MR. THOMAS BARRASFORD, Mr. George Barrasford, and Mr. Walter Gibbons were at the Alhambra, Paris, on Sunday, having journeyed from Brussels. They witnessed the house packed—not even standing room at the matinée—and a very fine programme. Among the many artists who are creating a furore at every performance and becoming popular Paris favourites are Les Cattaneos, La Rola, Ray Maskell, Wright and Lawson, and Ted E. Box. It is understood that Messrs. Barrasford and Gibbons are in treaty for a couple more theatres in Paris.

MISS DUNDAS SLATER, the eighteen-year-old daughter of the popular manager of the Coliseum, at an hour's notice was called upon to play Miss Olive May's part of Tita in Havana at the Gaiety Theatre on Monday night, and will retain the part during Miss May's recovery from a sprained knee. Miss Dundas Slater made the most of her opportunity, and gave a very bright and charming rendering of the character. Her experience on the boards has not been restricted to musical comedy, for she has appeared as Lady Orreyed in The Second Mrs. Tanqueray and as Tow-Tow in Sweet Nancy.

VESTA VICTORIA, as clever and versatile as ever, has made a hit at the Holborn Empire and Canterbury. The termination of her engagement at the Canterbury on Saturday evening was marked by a somewhat pathetic incident—the sequel to another of a like kind. Some considerable time ago when in Liverpool Miss Vesta Victoria was walking with a lady friend when she was attracted by the cry of "Flowers, lady." Thinking the face of the flower-seller familiar, she made inquiries, and found that it was the mother of a pro. whose name some years ago used to be a household word.

THE poor woman was stranded and practically destitute. Miss Vesta Victoria at once made arrangements to bring her back to London, but our fair artist's generosity did not end there. The incident had been forgotten until Saturday evening, when a small cardboard box was left at the stage-door of the Canterbury. Upon being opened it was found to contain two simple home-made artificial flowers with this note attached:—"To Miss Vesta Victoria in remembrance of your kindness to me in Liverpool." Needless to say, the simple offering will not be the least treasured of Miss Vesta Victoria's possessions. Miss Vesta Victoria leaves for America to-day.

THE Joint Board of the Federated Trade Unions and the Labour Party has considered all the correspondence relating to the position of the Artists' Protection League, and the following resolution has been unanimously adopted:—"That, in the opinion of the Joint Board, the Artists' Protection League is not eligible for affiliation to either the Trade Union Congress, the General Federation of Trade Unions, or the Labour Party."

MR. GLAZIER, who shared the duties of chef d'orchestre at the Empire with Mr. Cuthbert Clarke on the re-opening of that house in 1905, has lately been occupying the conductor's seat at the Alhambra, Brussels (Mr. Barrasford's house). He has now transferred his services in a like capacity to the King's Southsea, where he commenced his duties on Monday.

THE Tivoli v. Stratford Empire Music Hall and Theatrical Football League match was played on Sunday, Nov. 8, when a pleasant game ended in a well-deserved victory for the Tivoli, by three goals to one. The Tivolians, who are a very keen lot, now head the competition, which promises to be a most interesting one. Stoke Newington went down before the strenuous play of Holborn Empire, who also gained the verdict by three goals to one. The Holborn men now tie with the Newingtonians, who are second on the list.

THE monthly meeting of the committee of the Music Hall Sick Fund was held at the Crown Hotel, Charing Cross-road, on Wednesday. Mr. W. J. Wainratta presided, and there were also present Messrs. Pat Carey (hon. treasurer pro tem.), F. D. Harris, H. E. High, G. Fredericks, W. Brisco, T. Dunlo, T. Carney, T. B. Brydge, and Douglas White and Jesse Sparrow (trustees).

It was stated that Mr. Frank Heath, who had been compelled to resign the post of hon. treasurer through serious illness, was in about the same condition, and a hope was expressed that an improvement would speedily take place.

A HEARTY vote of thanks was accorded Mr. Pat Carey for giving his services as hon. treasurer, and after other business had been transacted, the meeting closed with a vote of thanks to the chairman.

THE removal from Spot Lodge having been successfully accomplished, Will Oliver is now installed in his new home at 28, Trent-road, Brixton Hill, ready to spot anything attractive in the amusement world.

FOR the Empire Theatre Life-boat matinée on Tuesday, Nov. 24, an attractive programme has been arranged. Miss Ada Reeve, Miss May de Sousa, Mr. Charles Hawtrey, Mr. Robert Michaelis, Miss Valli Valli, Mr. Sydney Valentine, Mr. Hymack, Miss Kate Cutler, Mr. Harry Fragson, Mr. George Graves and Miss Maud Boyd, Mr. W. H. Berry and Miss Kitty Hanson, have all promised to appear in special features from their respective répertoires; and Miss Beatrice Collier, Mr. Fred Farren, Miss Phyllis Bedells, and Miss Lydia Kyasht will give dances from the Empire ballet, A Day in Paris.

THE Liverpool Tivoli will not, as announced, be re-opened on Monday next. Arrangements are postponed.

MR. BARRASFORD'S new Hippodrome at Aston New Town, Birmingham, is now in a state approaching completion, and is expected to open on either Monday, Dec. 7 or 14. Mr. Thos. H. Middleton, assistant-manager and cashier at the Birmingham Hippodrome, is appointed manager.

THE eleventh annual general meeting of the shareholders of the Palace and Derby Castle (Limited), Douglas, Isle of Man, will be held at Derby Castle on Wednesday next at 8 p.m. There is a balance of £8,433 available for distribution, and it is proposed to pay a dividend of 5 per cent. both on the ordinary and preference shares. One thousand pounds will be carried to the reserve (now amounting to £2,500), and £933 is to be carried forward.

THE annual report of the Margate Entertainments Committee, presented to the Council on Monday, shows the handsome profit of £2,488 on the season's municipal amusements. This constitutes a record, but the profits have been rising steadily year by year. Although the committee has been established only a comparatively short period, it has handed over £10,477 for the relief of the rates and town improvements.

THESE profits are derived solely from outdoor amusements and entertainments. Notwithstanding unfavourable weather conditions during part of the season, the receipts compare favourably with those of any other year. The receipts of one concert party alone were £2,324, and the party takes half that sum.

ON Monday the Hastings Hippodrome Syndicate forwarded a message of congratulation to King Edward on the anniversary of his birthday, to which His Majesty graciously responded through his private secretary. During the evening a life-sized portrait of the King was shown by the Bioscope, when the audience rose and sang the National Anthem, assisted by the band.

THE following influential gentlemen will serve on the board of the proposed Brighton Summer and Winter Palace, viz.: Viscount Duncannon, Mr. John Waddington (who is next year's High Sheriff of Sussex), Sir Francis Laking, M.D., M.V.O. (the King's physician), the Hon. Cyril Ponsonby, Mr. Wm. Forbes (general-manager L. B. and S. C. Ry.), and Mr. Joe Lyons, who will act as chairman.

ON Tuesday night the Theatrical and Music Hall Committee, who were responsible for the matinée performance held for the benefit of the Chief Constable's Poor Children's Clothing Fund, met in the Blackpool Palace board-room to receive the balance-sheet for the performance held last month. Mr. Geo. H. Harrop presided.

THE balance-sheet, read by the hon. secretary (Mr. T. Brunskill) showed that the total realised was £572 4s. 11d. The cost of advertising, printing, &c., amounting to £22 10s. 2d., was defrayed by the Tower Co., and the only sum deducted from the income was 2½ per cent. upon matinée receipts for the Variety Artistes' Federation Benevolent Fund, which sum amounted to £5 5s. 6d., leaving £566 19s. 5d. to be handed to the Chief Constable.

THE Chairman said he would content himself by presenting the cheque for £566 19s. 5d. to the Chief Constable as an evidence of the great interest taken by the public of Blackpool in his very good work. The Chief Constable, in acknowledgment, referred in eulogistic terms to the great generosity of the Tower-Palace directors, and Mr. Geo. Harrop, the manager, in giving the free use of the building, and bearing all the expense.

MR. OSWALD STOLL, the managing-director of the Leicester Palace Theatre, kindly gave permission for two concerts to be held there on Sunday last, in aid of the Poor Children's Boot Fund and the Police Recreation Society's Fund. The admirable programme was arranged by the Leicester Choral Combination. The mayor and mayor-elect were present, and Mr. C. Finch-Hatton, the acting-manager, recited "The Revenge" (Tennyson) and "The Road to Ruin" (illustrated) (G. R. Sims).

MR. STOLL, owing to the great distress through unemployment in Leicester, has generously come to the rescue till such time as the Town Council get to work to aid the unemployed, by allowing collections to take place among the patrons at the doors at the close of the performance, and last week, when they commenced, the substantial sum of £19 10s. 7½d. was contributed.

THE report of the directors of the Pavilion, Glasgow, is entirely satisfactory. After providing for all charges, and making provision for depreciation on theatrical properties and electric light plant, the directors propose to pay a final dividend at the rate of 50 per cent. per annum, making, with the dividend already paid, 40 per cent. for the year. Mr. Lumley retires from the directorship, but offers himself for re-election.

ALTHOUGH the result of the season's working is not as financially successful as was the case in 1907, there is still a very satisfactory balance to the credit of the Amusements Committee of the Ramsgate Corporation. The profit was £253 4s. 7d. after discharging all liabilities. It has been resolved that the balance of £356 16s. at the Committee's disposal be allocated to the capital account to meet the expenses incurred by the installation of the electric light at the East and West Cliff bandstands and in Ellington Park, and also for awnings and ironwork erected on both cliffs.

A NUMBER of representative men having interests in the Regency Ward, Brighton, met informally on Tuesday night to exchange views respecting the proposed summer and winter palace on the front. A majority of those present were in favour of the project, but Councillor Hastie objected to the scheme, and expressed the belief that the railway company would bring visitors to Brighton, whirl them in taxi-cabs to the palace, and transport them back to London without benefitting trade in the town.

ON the other hand, Councillor Parry, one of the representatives of the ward, said that the scheme should be welcomed in the interests of boarding-houses. Up to the present, he added, most of the opposition had come from people who are well off. They found Brighton sufficiently prosperous for them, and saw no reason why it should be pushed forward. This scheme would advertise the town throughout the world, and induce many visitors to remain. Reference was also made to the success of Mr. Joseph Lyons's enterprise.

DR. WALFORD BODIE is repeating his great Scottish success since he came over the Border last week. Despite the fact of it being his third visit to Coventry within twelve months (a record for any star), he has played to enormous business. On Saturday night money was refused, the huge building being packed to the doors at early-door prices. This week he is again breaking all records on his sixth visit to the Palace, Bristol. Many of his old cures have appeared nightly to testify to the lasting result of his treatment. The doctor has signed again with Mr. Oswald Stoll for several of his leading halls, and is fully booked up this year and next. He returns on Monday next to the Palace, Plymouth.

THE anniversary of the Camberwell Palace will be celebrated on Friday next with a special programme. Two performances, beginning at 6.15 and 9.5 respectively, will be given.

MISS KITTY COLYER opens immediately at the London Pavilion, where she will be heard in her new and graceful chorus song, "My little snow house." The lady, who is booked up for years, has been cheered to the echo nightly during the current week at the Woolwich and Rotherhithe Hippodromes. She has had a big offer to appear in pantomime in the West End.

THE general meeting of the Music Hall Ladies' Guild takes place at the Oxford on Wednesday, Nov. 25, at two o'clock sharp. All members and friends of the profession are heartily invited. Members of the M.H.L.G. are especially requested to attend.

A SPECIAL general meeting of the Terriers will be held at the Three Stags Hotel, Kennington-road, S.E., on Friday, Nov. 20, at 1.30 o'clock in the afternoon, to consider the advisability of (1) expelling a member under Rule 22, or cancelling his membership under Rule 14, and (2) changing the place of the Sunday meetings.

THE numerous friends and admirers of Mr. Arthur Lennard will be glad to hear that his wife (Miss Lizzie Fletcher) successfully underwent a rather serious operation at a West-End nursing home on Tuesday.

MR. PETER DAVEY has secured Miss Bessie Butt as his principal boy for the forthcoming pantomime of Cinderella at the Royal County Theatre, Kingston-on-Thames.

TED E. BOX, who is now going great guns at the Alhambra, Paris, has been secured for the Syndicate halls for dates extending into 1914, through the agency of Will Oliver.

MISS BESSIE BUTT returns on Monday to the Coliseum, where it will be remembered she made such a success as the Black Pearl in Leslie Stuart's song, which was originally produced by Eugene Stratton at that house. This will be Miss Butt's first appearance at the Coliseum as a single turn.

THE Dunedin Troupe of cyclists, whose skill and daring have been highly appreciated in the provinces, have returned to London. They performed last week at the Coliseum and Hippodrome a wonderful exhibition of endurance when one takes into account the strenuous nature of their turn and the immense difficulties that they set themselves to overcome. Truly a fine show!

THE committee of the M.H.A.R.A. met on Wednesday, when Mr. Marriott Edgar, who has just been initiated as a Water Rat, was in the chair. Messrs. Jeff Vendome, T. C. Callaghan, Harold Finden, H. Cee Mee, Albert Schafer, J. Alexander, Chas. Preston, Albini, and C. Douglas Stuart (secretary). The agency at Gloucester was transferred to the Fleece Hotel, and a new agency was opened at the Black Horse Hotel, Greenock. The weekly statement showed an increase of thirty-five new members and receipts amounting to £58 8s.

MR. ERNIE MAYNE, the well-known comedian, rejoices in bookings up to the year 1914, "the simple one" having signed contracts with Messrs. Moss and Stoll, Messrs. Gibbons, and Barrasford, and the Tozer, Payne, and Gros halls. Mr. Mayne's peculiar personality and his fund of humour will be evoking shouts of laughter at the Borough Theatre, Stratford, where he will make his first appearance in a London pantomime. This week he is at the Coliseum, where great crowds rock with laughter at his drollery.

WE regret to announce the death, after a painful illness, of Mr. Arthur Lupino, who passed away on Thursday, leaving a widow and three daughters (Lily, Cissy, and Dora) to mourn his loss. A son of the late George Lupino, sen., of the Original Lupino Family, Arthur had played all the principal music halls with his brother Harry, as the Lupino Brothers, also all the principal theatres during the Christmas season. He was the original Nana, the favourite retriever of the Darlings in Peter Pan, at the Duke of York's Theatre, where he had the pleasure of playing before His Majesty King Edward the Seventh.

THE deceased comes from an old theatrical family, and the Chevalier Lupino, who in the early days of the nineteenth century fled from the sunny South before the Napoleonic wars, and became costumier at the King's Theatre, in the Haymarket, was an ancestor. With his brothers, George and Harry, he learnt his business as a member of the Lupino Family, which was engaged for pantomime openings and harlequinade. He became an accomplished exponent of grotesque pantomime, and, of late years, has been associated with animal parts.

SPACE is rapidly being booked for the Fun City in the Annexe of Olympia, but Mr. C. B. Cochran has taken the precaution to reserve a few central positions for novelties that may come along at the last moment. Every effort is being made to secure first-class variety novelties for the free show, which will be given on the stage three times daily. There will also be several other free features, which will constitute an entirely new departure in fair amusements. Prizes will be given weekly for beauty shows, wrestling and boxing competitions, and all sorts of interesting and amusing games.

A NOVEL form of advertising Fun City will be a four-page newspaper, to be called the Fun City News, which will be gratuitously distributed at every house within an area of four miles of Olympia. The publication will be edited by a well-known journalist, and will contain much interesting matter in regard to the various shows and showmen in the Fun City.

MR. E. A. CAMEO, of the Cameo Troupe, on Tuesday had a message to open at the Hippodrome, Burnley, on the same night. With his troupe he caught the 6.43 p.m. train from Manchester (Victoria), due to arrive at Burnley at 7.58. Though the train was ten minutes late, the troupe were able to appear in the first house, thanks to the able assistance of the manager and the smartness of their baggage man.

MISS FLORRIE GALLIMORE, who is making a big success on tour with Murphy and Lipton's "My girl's a Yorkshire girl," resumes her part of Dick in Messrs. Dottridge and Longden's highly-successful Dick Whittington company, Christmas. We are pleased to see this popular lady has fully recovered from her recent illness, and is looking her charming self again and in excellent form.

MISS JOSIE DELAINE (Miss Gallimore's daughter) closes her second six weeks' engagement to-night at the Palace Theatre and the Gibbons' tour, and goes on a short provincial run until Dec. 14, when she also returns to Messrs. Dottridge and Longden's company, to play Alice to her mother's Dick Whittington. It is rather unusual, we believe, for mother and daughter to play principal boy and girl together. Miss Delaine, who is not yet nineteen years of age, has made rapid strides in her profession since her first appearance a little over three years ago. She is booked at all the principal London halls, including Oxford and Tivoli, and has received a very tempting offer for Russia.

MR. J. L. GRAYDON, the doyen of proprietors, who lifted the flag of wholesome entertainment for the people at the Middlesex as far back as the seventies, was heartily congratulated by proprietors, managers, and agents on Thursday evening on the continued prosperity of his hall. It was anniversary night, and as is the agreeable custom at such celebrations, the boxes looked pretty in their tasteful floral decorations and bouquets, were presented to all the lady artists. The house was packed to the corners, and great shouts of welcome went up when any particular favourite appeared behind the footlights.

THE company of the week included Tom Foy and company in The Yorkshire Lad in London, Jack Lorimer, McConnell Trio, Cora Casselli, Bert Terrell, Harding and Preston, Master Frisby, Carl and Carr, the Avrignys, Rose and Wold, Tom Collins, Gladys Nelson, and Graydon's picture programme, which has become quite a popular feature. Mr. Tom Rice managed the stage. These were reinforced by a host of other attractions, including the Palace Girls. Mr. Graydon, in his speech from the footlights, referred to the embargo by the Federation, and thanked his supporters for their continued favour.

REGAN AND RYAN are scoring well this week at Clapham and Camberwell in a good chorus song from the pen of Will Hyde, entitled "Walking down the street."

MR. ARNOLD BELL will shortly produce in London a weird romantic episode entitled Under a Spell, written by himself and Brien McCullough.

THE Dunvilles, who sent birthday wishes to the King, received the following wire:—"Dunvilles, Circus, Hull. The King commands me to thank you for your good wishes.—Knollys."

MME. MAURICIA MORICHINI, the Brazilian operatic artist; the Orchestra Espagnole, a band corresponding to the English "Black Dyke"; and Frank A. Gotch, the wrestler, and company, in a comedy sketch, All About a Bout, are the new turns at the Coliseum on Monday next.

MISS LIL HAWTHORNE concluded a most successful engagement at the London Coliseum last week, her songs, "Just some one," "My castle in Spain," and "The boy who stuttered and the girl who lisped," meeting with hearty approval from the vast audiences. Miss Hawthorne has a few weeks' provincial tour, then returns to town.

THIS week at Burnley Charcot has again created the greatest excitement by his blindfold drive. Several thousands of people lined the streets to see the performance, and all traffic was brought to a complete standstill. Packed houses have resulted, and on several nights money has been turned away.

ANOTHER brilliant success by Frederick Maxwell is to be recorded in his latest production, Give a Man a Chance, produced for the first time at the Pavilion, Leicester, on Monday. The scene is laid in Western America, and the mounting and dresses are all that could be desired. Mr. Maxwell and his company commence a season of twenty-five weeks in London on Monday, opening at the Surrey Theatre.

A VERY funny farcical sketch of fifteen minutes' duration entitled Bertie's Week-end (by Stewart D. Wright, of Glasgow) was produced for copyright purposes last week at the Theatre Royal, Inverness, by Mr. John Clyde's company. This playlet, the plot of which is laid at a seaside hotel, teems with funny situations from the rise to the fall of the curtain, and was smartly presented by Mr. H. Macaulay (Mr. Clyde's stage-manager), Mr. David Blair, Mr. McIntosh Clyde, and Miss Jeannie Clyde.

OF interest to music-hall artists was the case heard at Stockton on Tuesday, when T. Kelso and company, sketch artists, sued John Batty, proprietor of the Grand Variety Theatre, Stockton, for breach of contract. Plaintiffs contracted to appear at defendant's theatre in August, but in March the defendant, under a clause in the contract, closed the theatre owing to the North-East Coast engineers' strike, and gave notice that future contracts were off. A month after, however, the theatre reopened with a stock dramatic company. Plaintiffs gave notice of their intention to fulfil the engagement, but the defendant refused to receive them.

THE defence relied upon a clause in the agreement which made the performance of contract devolve upon the defendant remaining in occupancy of the theatre. Defendant said he had let the theatre to Mr. Montgomery, Liverpool, upon lease, for the production of dramas.

MR. C. J. DOUGHTY, barrister, who was instructed by the solicitors to the Variety Artists' Federation, said it was a test case, and stated that music-hall artists were seeking to put a stop to music-hall proprietors engaging artists long dates ahead, barring them from appearing in the meantime within a certain radius, and failing to fulfil their contracts. His Honour said artists had their remedy; they should not sign such agreements. Judgment was entered for the defendant, with costs, leave to appeal being refused.

ON behalf of the committee of the Music Hall Guild, 61, New Oxford-street, W.C., Miss Melinda May, secretary, wishes to thank Mrs. Wallace Northern for her collection of 6s.; Miss Dora Gregory, St. George and Dragon company, for her collection of 5s.; Mr. Tom Fancourt for his collection of 2s. 6d.; Miss Irene Rose, for collecting towards children's Christmas tree, 1s. 9d.; Mr. E. Luke (Southsea), for parcel of books for Christmas tree; Miss Lottie Albert, for donation of 2s. 6d. and basket of clothing; for two parcels of gentlemen's clothing, posted Kennington (anonymous); Mrs. Vernon Cowper, for parcel clothing; Miss Louie Davis, parcel of babies' clothes; Mrs. J. N. Caldwell, "Coloured Masters," parcel gentlemen's clothing.

MISS MAY acknowledges with thanks the following donations:—Mrs. Henry Muff, 10s.; Mrs. Bradgate, 7s. 6d., and V.A.B.F., £1; Mr. Henry George Hibbert 1s. 6d towards the fund raised to help a poor sufferer in a home for consumptives. Proprietors and managers please note that should they require scene hands, caretakers, women as cleaners, dressers, or to help in wardrobes, the same can be sent with excellent references. Miss May would be grateful for gentlemen's as well as ladies' clothing. Friends of the charity are heartily welcome to tea and reception held every Wednesday from 4 to 5 o'clock.

AT the Westminster County Court on Wednesday, Miss Carrie Fraser sued Mr. Phillip Williams for damages for wrongful dismissal. The plaintiff, a vocalist and accompanist, was engaged to appear in defendant's troupe at Hythe, commencing on July 15, until the end of September. The show opened as a matter of fact on July 25, and plaintiff was put on as the second item in the first part of the programme, and in the same position in the second half. There were very few people present when she gave her first song, but she got an encore for her second. On the 28th she was dismissed for incompetence. She is now acting as accompanist to Miss Cissie Loftus at the Coliseum. His Honour Judge Woodfall said that the charge of incompetence had not been made out, and he found for the plaintiff for £21 9s. 11d.

PEOPLE who were astir on Sunday morning in the Old Trafford neighbourhood of the Manchester Ship Canal were much astonished to see a lady, dressed in a pretty bathing costume, climb on to the balustrade and allow herself to be handcuffed.

AFTER a call to the men in the boat to "be ready," she gracefully dived thirty feet into the inky stream, beneath the surface of which she remained for twenty-four seconds. When she reappeared her hands were free of the shackles, and with an easy breast stroke she swam to the boat.

THE lady, it transpired, was Oceana, who made her first professional appearance in this country at the Hulme Hippodrome. She is described as "the champion high diver of Germany," and the "handcuff queen." Another Oceana, who also came from Germany, performed many years ago at the Covent Garden Circus and afterwards at the Trocadero.

MR. CHARLES D. HICKMAN has just completed special commissions for the following ventriloquists:—Miss Maude Edwards, Tom Edwards, Coram, and for Arthur Croxon and the Scottish Meisters. Norman Osborne, Messrs. Adeler and Sutton's new ventriloquial find, who comes to London shortly, will work Mr. Hickman's dialogues exclusively.

MISS MADGE TEMPLE, who took her huge matinée hat with her to the Manchester Hippodrome this week, has scored a great success. She opens at the Liverpool Empire on Monday. Miss Temple's new song, "Come, be my Rainbow," will be featured by Mr. Wyndham this year in all his pantomimes. Miss Temple's husband, Mr. Hermann Darewski, has also booked his two great song successes "Bombardier" and "Sue, Sue, Sue," for the Royal, Manchester, and the Court and Shakespeare Theatres, Liverpool.

CHARLES JAMES JOHNSON, known on the music-hall stage as "the Black Diamond," was sued on Wednesday in the Sheriff's Court at Birmingham for damages for slander. The plaintiff, Mr. William Edward Johnson, a jeweller and pawnbroker, who said he had extensive dealings with the theatrical profession, said the defendant handed him a ring at the Empire, Birmingham, and asked him to give him a quotation for one like it.

AFTER the return of the ring the following night the defendant accused him of having changed one of the stones, and persisted in the allegation, notwithstanding the plaintiff's repudiation and demand for withdrawal. Miss Helen Long, one of the plaintiff's assistants, said the defendant's ring was in her custody all the time it was on the plaintiff's premises, and there was no ground for suggesting that it had been interfered with. One of the stones was smaller than the others, and she pointed this out to the plaintiff when he instructed her to match them. The jury assessed the damages at £5, and judgment was entered for this amount with costs.

HENRY MARTIN, otherwise Davis and Webster, was brought up on Wednesday from Brixton Prison, on remand, before Mr. Hopkins at Westminster, charged on summonses at the instance of the Music Publishers' Association with being in possession for sale purposes of large quantities of pirated music. Mr. A. Preston, an agent of the Association, deposed that on the evening of Nov. 3 observation was kept on the prisoner, who was seen to leave Rowton House, Newington Butts, with large parcels. Prisoner was followed, and then stopped by the police, who found the parcels to consist of pirated music.

SEARCH warrants were afterwards obtained, and in lockers which prisoner had at different lodging-houses nearly 1,000 pirated copies and hundreds of catalogues were discovered. Prisoner was a wholesale distributor, and worked for his brother, the printer of the music. Mr. Hopkins fined prisoner £15 and three guineas costs. He ordered the pirated music to be destroyed. Mr. Preston remarked that prisoner had a banking account.

AN arbitration case under the Workmen's Compensation Act was brought last week at Gloucester County Court. It arose out of the death of a German lion-tamer's attendant, Joseph Hasselmann, who was fatally mauled by a lion in the Gloucester Palace Theatre on Sunday, July 18, 1907. The applicants were the parents, and the respondents were Messrs. C. W. Poole and J. R. Poole, music-hall proprietors, of the Palace Theatre, Gloucester, and Mrs. Ella Jensen, a lion-tamer known as Mme. Ella.

MRS. JENSEN and her lions arrived at the Palace Theatre on the afternoon of Sunday, July 28, and the cages were taken into the theatre in readiness for a performance on the Monday evening. While Mrs. Jensen was away on Sunday, one of the lions was found in the theatre dressing-room. Hasselmann tried to get it back into its cage, ultimately throwing two chairs at it. Thereupon it sprang upon him, and inflicted injuries from which he died the same evening. After the accident Hasselmann said it was his own fault, and that he wanted to get the lion back into its cage before Mme. Ella returned, so that she should not know what had happened.

ON behalf of the respondents it was contended that Hasselman let the lion out of its cage into the dressing-room himself (which he had no right to do) to try a little lion taming on his own account. Consequently, the accident could not be said to have arisen out of or in the course of his employment. Messrs. Poole could not be held liable in any case, as their contract with Mme. Ella did not commence until the Monday. His Honour agreed, and gave judgment for the respondents. Mr. Hogg's application for costs against Mrs. Jensen was refused.

DROPPING into the Poplar Hippodrome, on Saturday evening, we had the pleasure of becoming acquainted with Mr. William Doland's latest enterprise, as indicated by the very delightful performance of the Ten Taxi Girls. It is a somewhat novel show, which should be seen for some time to come. The music is bright and catchy, and the libretto (both from the pen of Mr. H. Barron) up-to-date. Miss Queenie Grey, who leads the ten girls out of a big yellow taxi-cab, was particularly smart in a number entitled "Flip-Flap." Miss Dora Marsden's rendering of the Cockney Carol called "London" immediately caught on with the gallery, and Miss Connie Chevelier sang "Let me teach you how to love me!" charmingly, and looked an ideal taxi-driver.

A SENSATIONAL incident took place a few days ago in the Scottish Zoo, at Glasgow. It was a fight between two huge pythons in the snake-house. While on a round of inspection, the night watchman observed the two reptiles engaged in a fierce struggle. He made several attempts to separate the combatants, but these only intensified their fury. Finding that all his efforts were futile, the watchman telephoned to Mr. E. H. Bostock, who soon appeared on the scene, and by the aid of pronged instruments and the attendant's assistance succeeded in removing one of the reptiles to another house. The house in which the fight took place contains a large number of other reptiles of large proportions, and nearly all were greatly excited, and were with much difficulty kept from joining in the fray. The combatants were much exhausted after their conflict, and have since remained in a comatose state.

SONGS, WRITERS, AND SINGERS.

AMONG Christmas and New Year dance music none is likelier to have a greater vogue than "London Life," the new set of lancers just issued by Messrs. Francis and Day. They have been arranged by Warwick Williams on melodies just lately made popular on the halls by such high lights as Misses Vesta Tilley, Marie Lloyd, Vesta Victoria, Hetty King, Kitty Rayburn, Ella Retford, and Florrie Forde, and Messrs. R. G. Knowles, George Lashwood, Dan Crawley, Charles Whittle, Harry Simms, &c., and will help to brighten many a variety programme either as overture or selection, including, as they do, the following favourite airs, "Oh! Oh! Antonio!" "Take me on the Flip Flap," "I'm afraid to come home in the dark," "Jolly good luck to the girl who loves a soldier," "Hang out the front door key," "Mandy's Wedding," "Won't you come to me in Canada?" "Musette" (intermezzo Parisienne by Neil Moret, of "Poppies" and "Silverheels" fame), "Don't get married any more, ma," "We've all been doing a bit," "Rum-tiddley-um-tum-tay!" "Come and have a drink with me," and "Who said he don't like girls?"

MR. WALLIS ARTHUR'S humorous husband-and-wife sarcastic duet, "'Do you remember?'—'How can I forget?'" is being added to Messrs. Francis and Day's "Sixpenny Pops."

MISS FANNY ROBINA is making an enormous success with her song "The Land of Promise," written by Billie Bint and composed by Miss Florry Cooper. This song will be issued next week by Mr. David Day. All pantomime artists should secure this number if they want a certain winner

A NEW song published by B. Feldman and Co., from the pen of Macdonald and Tate, is entitled "The Bubble and the Sunbeam." Startling effects are promised with this number (particulars appeared in The Era, on Oct. 17 last). We should advise every principal girl to at once secure this song for pantomime.

"A TINY SEED OF LOVE," also written and composed by Macdonald and Tate, and published by Messrs. B. Feldman and Co., is, the publishers inform us, the most sensational song this country has ever known. During all the successful years this firm has been in existence they advise us that they have never had any song approaching the success of this. It is already secured for innumerable pantomimes. "Too late" is an unfortunate remark for artists to have to make.

MR. CHARLES WHITTLE has introduced this week what the audience at the South London in one voice declared to be the "girl" song of the year. The round of well-merited applause he got after the first verse last Monday, the evening of its first production, at that hall must have been very gratifying to the artist, and the pleasure he gave them in this song, entitled "I want you to see my girl," by Godfrey and Castling, was testified by the hearty way in which the whole house sang it, and their applause at the end. This is a "top-liner" of Messrs. Feldman and Co., for pantomime.

ANOTHER big success comes from the pen of Mellor, Lawrance, and Gifford, this time in the shape of an Irish song, which B. Feldman and Co. have secured. Within a few weeks the country will ring with this melody, which is acknowledged by everybody who has heard it to be the greatest Irish song written for years. Principal boys, please note.

Do you want a dainty number
For your coming pantomime?
Go for "Little Silver Moonbeam"
Sheard and Co. are there this time;
With its pretty four-part chorus,
If you sing this sweet new song,
I am sure you won't regret it,
And the audience won't forget it,
When old Christmas comes along!

"I CAN'T GET AWAY FROM THE GIRLS," now that two strong verses have been added to it, is certain to be the great principal boy and comedians' song for pantomimes. Its melody is bright, melodious, and catchy, and fairly takes the place of last year's hit, "Put me among the girls." It has no rival among the girl songs of this season, being streets in front of all others.

MR. CHARLES SHEARD informs us, that during the forty years' experience he has had since taking over the reins of management from his father, he does not remember an instance when an entirely new song has been so much sought after for pantomime and general stage purposes as the simple and captivating number, "Little Silver Moonbeam," by Gilbert Adair and Marcus Hope. Mr. Sheard considers the prospects of "Little Silver Moonbeam's" success as almost unprecedented.

ITS charmingly simple words, its ear-haunting melody, its harmonised refrain, for invisible chorus, its adaptability to almost every situation, and, above all, its easy and inexpensive staging—a moon shining on a calm sea—all go to explain Mr. Sheard's confident anticipation. It is especially suitable for Dick Whittington, Robinson Crusoe, Sindbad the Sailor, and Aladdin.

MESSRS. CHARLES SHEARD AND CO. have been fortunate enough to secure for publication Messrs. Gilbert Adair and Marcus Hope's latest composition, entitled "If I were a fairy queen." It is now in the press, and will be ready in a day or two. It is an ideal song for Cinderellas, and tells a pretty story. The music, also, is delightfully melodious and catchy.

THE LOVELACES, the popular song illustrators, have recently secured a charming set of slides from Messrs. Sheard and Co. for their song, "A sweeter story still," which they are now working with the very best results in Lancashire. So pleased are they with the success of the song, that they will keep it on for a considerable time.

PANTOMIME "Demon Kings" (there must be a "Demon King"!) invariably fall back upon old songs. They need not do so this season, if they consult Messrs. Sheard and Co., the publishers of "Asleep in the deep," and ask to see Stanley Gordon's newest bass songs—"When the ebbtide flows," "Queen of my dreams," "Out of the night," "The last voyage," and others. They are all dramatic and strong, both in words and music, and a "Demon" who has these in his répertoire need not fall back upon the old worn-out "bass" songs.

THE author of "Sleep and forget" (Mr. Clifton Bingham) was one day recently asked by Miss L. V. White, the composer, if he had an idea. He promptly replied, "Yes; why not do a reply to our song?" No sooner said than done. In a few hours "Wake and remember" was written and composed, and it will shortly be published by Messrs. Charles Sheard and Co. It is quite as melodious as its predecessor, and possesses all the elements of popularity that have made "Sleep and forget" so well known.

MR. ROWLAND HILL has purchased three big, original numbers, viz., "The Shepherd," "Britannia," and "The Diver," which he will produce shortly.

V.A.F. AND THE AGENTS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE ERA.

SIR,—Though I am of opinion that this question is of no paramount interest to the public, yet as statements have appeared continuously in the Press—mostly one-sided—while the dispute has been raging between the V.A.F. and the agents, and the statement has been made that managers extract large commissions from artists—a serious reflection upon the conduct of managers and proprietors, and likely to prejudice them in the eyes of the public—I make bold to ask you to permit me to give a statement of facts which I believe to be correct and truthful. As a good deal of this matter was placed before the arbitrator by me, and not controverted in cross-examination, your readers will be enabled to judge on whom rests the responsibility for disturbing an industry by which a large number of people get employment, and in which a great many of the public are interested as shareholders. They will be able to realise how much justification exists for creating such disturbance, and threatening various managers with all sorts of pains and penalties, in order to coerce them and hamper them in the legitimate exercise of their business.

From my point of view, it is impossible to carry on the variety business without reputable agents. Imagine an artist coming into my office to offer his services, and that I should have to criticise his work, or his capacity, or talent, to him in person, and offer him less money, and bargain with him. As for my booking I require about seventy-five artists weekly, I would have to interview about one hundred per day, whereas, when an agent comes into the office with his book I can book ten, twenty, or thirty turns with him. I can bargain, and in my sixteen years' experience I have found the agent is the man who defends the artist's value and price. He is more responsible for the high salaries of artists than anybody else. The grievance against them is that they get ten per cent., and that they ought to do their business on the same terms as a banker, who lends other people's money, getting more interest for their capital than he allows the depositor who leaves it with him.

I further say that while the agents get all the abuse, artists cause more trouble because they will not confine themselves to one reputable agent, but trouble managers by having two or three different agents working for them, and frequently at different prices. When it comes to the commission clause—of which, in some instances, we get a portion—and the general status of the agent, as I was the only manager who dealt with that subject before Mr. Askwith, I wish to call attention to my evidence before that gentleman, if your space permit. I did so on account of the many misleading statements made in the public prints during the strike by the other side.

COPY OF STATEMENT BEFORE ARBITRATOR.

It has been stated that contracts are made by managers prejudicial to artists' interests, and of a nature so stringent as to prevent their general employment. I thought it might be advisable to show the necessity for some of the clauses that are in dispute, in a typical contract like the Metropolitan Music Hall, the first clause being the commission clause:—

"The engagement having been made through an agent, it is agreed that the company shall deduct and retain ten per cent., and pay the same to the said agent, or as he may direct."

In lieu of the words, "or as he may direct," I think it should distinctly state "of which two and a half per cent. shall go to the company towards the cost of book-keeping, &c., and trouble of collecting." The objection by artists is puerile; there is no hardship for them. When they only pay their agent five per cent. there is nothing stopped. There is considerable trouble in keeping these accounts, and the agent gives the company two and a half per cent. People may be perfectly honest and take a considerable time to pay their debts, but the fact remains, the agents have had great losses in the past. It is a claim that is not easily recoverable when an artist is unfortunate, or dies, or travels for a long time on the Continent or in the Colonies, and agents who are business men have consented to give two and a half per cent. for this collection in order to get their money promptly.

The artist appends his signature to the contract, and is a party thereto, and, in many instances, prefers it, as he knows exactly the amount that is coming to him. It has been advanced that Mr. Stoll has ceased to collect this amount, but that is no reason why it should be abolished, because the Moss' Empires, which was the first company—at the request of agents, I believe—to introduce this system, is a very huge concern, and they may have found that two and a half per cent. did not pay them for the trouble of collecting.

The statement made that in some instances the agent claims a further commission from the artist I can scarcely credit, and I doubt if any reputable agent could be produced who has done so, and certainly none who have obtained it. But if such has been done the names of the agents ought to be published. I venture to suggest that one or two members of the Agents' Association should be heard on this.

Cross-examined by Mr. Doughty:—

Q. You probably agree to this extent, that the agent is the agent of the artist, and not of the manager?

A. The agent is the agent of the artist, and is the primary culprit. He has run salaries up for the artist, and has made salaries excessive.

Q. Never mind that. He is the agent of the artist, there is no doubt about that?

A. Undoubtedly.

Q. And it is usual in all other businesses for the principal to pay his own agent?

A. They do that now.

Q. Directly?

A. Directly. Well, I gave you my statement on that, you know, very succinctly, and can only refer you to that. I say that the agent is a business man, and that it pays him better to give us a fourth share of his commission to get his money promptly. I do not want to sit here and throw the slightest aspersion upon artists, amongst whom there are a great many men and women whom I respect. I come into daily contact with them, and have lived on terms of business amity with them, but the agents evidently think it pays them, and they ought to be the best judges. I can give you one instance of an artist—

Q. You cannot argue from single instances.

A. I would rather not, but it is a question like this: the two and a half per cent. deduction entails a certain amount of work. I can show my salary books. The commissions are all put down on one side, and lodged in the bank on the Monday, and at the end of the month cheques are drawn for them; and it stands to reason—it answers itself—that if the agent says "It pays me better to give you two and a half per cent. off my earnings than to wait until I get paid," he must have a reason for this.

Q. Do you suggest that if artists paid their agents directly the agent would lose a quarter of his remuneration?

A. I would rather not say.

Q. I would like you to answer.

A. You are asking me to throw an aspersion upon a certain number of people. I have put it in as nice a way as I could. It is a debt that runs on, and is not easily recoverable. Some of the commissions in former years ran into hundreds of pounds before they were paid.

Q. They were paid, I suppose?

A. If an artist dies and there is no estate they are not paid.

To place the entire examination before your readers would occupy too much of your valuable space. Suffice it to say that after my evidence some agents were called as witnesses, and that Mr. Askwith, notwithstanding the very strong complaints on this subject by the V.A.F. Executive, did not disturb it by his Award. I venture to think this speaks for itself.—Thanking you in anticipation, I am, yours faithfully,

HENRI GROS,
President of the Entertainments Association.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE ERA.

SIR,—With reference to the number of letters that have been appearing in your paper of late respecting the Agency dispute, I beg to place the following particulars before you, and shall be glad if you will give publicity to the same.

It is now some years since a discussion arose between the proprietors, directors, and managers, and the principal artists as to the various clauses in their agreements—the artists complaining of great injustice, especially emphasising the "barring clause" and removals from one hall to another at the option of the proprietor; also changing the times of turns without consulting their convenience, as well as introducing matinées, for which they were not paid, no mention of same being made in the original contract.

The following Christmas a number of music-hall artists formed themselves into a Federation—the time chosen to do this was most inopportune, as most of the leading artists were in pantomime, but in spite of this they decided to strike, the strike lasting about four weeks. Some of the artists made great sacrifices in order to meet this so-called Federation, and eventually the matter went to arbitration. This arbitration lasted about three or four months (Mr. Askwith was the Arbitrator) and caused great injury to the music hall business; in some cases practically suspending business; but this was eventually settled by a special contract being drawn up.

I would specially draw your attention to the fact that during the whole of this time the agents were never mentioned—they being left in a neutral position.

The agents, seeing that their business was being interfered with by the Variety Artists' Federation, convened a meeting, at which it was agreed that the present rate of commission should remain unaltered, although, at the same time, the agents would be pleased to consider any suggestions the Variety Artists' Federation might care to make with respect to the re-engagement clause of the agents' office copy.

In order to be fair, an agreement was arrived at on Aug. 27, 1908, between a sub-committee of the Variety Artists' Federation and a sub-committee of the Variety Agents' Association, wherein both bound themselves to accept the re-engagement clause—the agents maintaining that it was a protection to their business against unscrupulous artists, and insisting on a commission on re-engagements. Further, the agents agreed to make a great sacrifice on such engagements, reducing the time-limit to three months. This proposition was accepted by the sub-committee.

The question then arose as to the artist who got his re-engagement through the manager or proprietor direct during the time he was playing his engagement, on a promise that he was paying his agent (which promise was very rarely, if ever, kept), and it was decided that this matter should be left to the members for settlement. So far, the matter was settled, the chairman of the Federation—Mr. Joe O'Gorman—confirming all that had passed at the meeting. In confirmation of this statement, I will give you an exact copy of the minutes of this meeting:—

"A meeting was held at the Variety Artists' Federation offices, 28, Wellington-street, Strand, W.C., on Aug. 27, 1908, at 12 noon, called by the secretary of the V.A.F.

"Present—representing the Variety Artists' Federation—Messrs. Joe O'Gorman, C. Bartram, Clemart, G. d'Albert, Monte Bayley (secretary to the V.A.F.).

"Present—representing the Variety Agents' Association—Messrs. F. Napoli, F. Reeves, E. Granville, E. Warner, P. Bauer, S. Bury, D. Cohen, H. Wieland, E. Cadle, H. Milburn, T. Shaw, E. Edelsten, G. Peel, I. Somers, G. Foster, E. Brown, and Sydney M. Hyman (secretary pro tem.).

"Mr. Joe O'Gorman acted as chairman.

"Mr. Tom Shaw acted as vice-chairman, and spoke on behalf of the agents.

"The chairman explained fully the meeting, and while admitting the commission note might be made not to exceed 10 per cent., the majority of the members were against this, and considered 5 per cent. sufficient. The chairman said that the agents present could take it that he would get the mass meeting of the Variety Artists' Federation—to be held on Sunday, Sept. 6, 1908—to agree to whatever he (the chairman) put before them.

"A suggested office copy of the Variety Artists' Federation was put before the meeting and fully discussed, the chairman explaining that some of the clauses in it might not meet with approval of the agents, and therefore it would be advisable to take each clause separately.

"After a lengthy discussion it was agreed by the agents present to accept an office copy on the lines only of that suggested by the Variety Artists' Federation, but with the following important alterations:—

"1. That the amount of commission should be left blank, to be followed by the words 'not to exceed 10 per cent.'

"2. That there be an absolute re-engagement clause of three months if made direct with the proprietor by the artist.

"3. The other clauses, being of minor importance, should be left in abeyance.

"The chairman pointed out that he had a very difficult matter to place before the Variety Artists' Federation meeting as regards the re-engagement clause, but he thought that with his influence and that of the executive committee, and in view of the way in which the agents had expressed themselves, he would be able to get the office copy passed with the alteration as suggested—in fact, they could take it from him that this would be done.

"The meeting then adjourned."

The meaning of Clause 2, referred to above, and which seems to be misunderstood by most of the music hall artists, is that any artist is allowed to make the re-engagement through any agent he wishes; but the stipulation the agents make is that for three months after the conclusion of any engagement the artist binds himself not to make the re-engagement direct with a proprietor.

The great protection that the artist has in this clause is that in no instance will he have to pay more than 10 per cent. commission; and should his own agent, or any other agent, be unable to make the re-engagement in the time stated, the artist is at liberty to go direct to the proprietor and make his re-engagement himself.

The following Sunday a meeting of the Variety Artists' Federation was held, presided over by Mr. Joe O'Gorman, who, in spite of his promises, persuaded the members of the Variety Artists' Federation to eliminate the whole of the re-engagement clause. This being adverse to the arrangements already arrived at, the agents had no alternative but to refuse to listen to such proposals.

At this point the agents thought it best to hold a meeting amongst themselves, and it was resolved they should not attend the meeting of the Variety Artists' Federation to be held on Sept. 17. It was further decided that the agents should see some of the proprietors and place the whole of the facts before them.

A letter was sent to the Variety Artists' Federation stating that the agents could not meet them on the face of their decision at their previous meeting, whereat the artists decided to accept an office copy with a three months' re-engagement clause in, and in reply the agents received a most insulting letter.

In spite of this rebuff and insult after insult from the Variety Artists' Federation, the agents wrote stating they were still open to consider the matter on a fair basis, and suggested that the matter should go to arbitration—this was as regards the re-engagement clause (the only point in dispute as far as the agents were concerned, although the Variety Artists' Federation had already agreed to this). The reply they received was a blank refusal on the part of the Federation. Further than this, the letter contained threatening consequences unless the Federation's proposals were accepted.

After this letter had been considered by the majority of agents, they decided to form themselves into a combine, which, I might mention, is comprised of every agent of note within the United Kingdom, its membership numbering just on seventy agents. This also includes a number of agents who do a large business abroad.

The Federation at this point thought it advisable to hold another meeting, and in the report of their proceedings in the Performer (a music-hall organ published by the Variety Artists' Federation in which to air their one-sided arguments, and so arouse bad feeling between the agents and artists, and, being a trade-union journal, is protected when making libellous statements), they gave a list of agents who were said to have accepted their terms, but on investigating the same, little or nothing was known of the agents (?) mentioned. Certainly they have never been missed.

To meet this the Federation issued a manifesto to all its members forbidding them to pay the commission owing to agents—it was of no consequence whether the commission was for past or present contracts. "Let them sue you in court—plead poverty—ask for weekly payment order" were amongst the many subterfuges offered by the Federation to its members.

Now, when you come to think that some of these artists are booked years ahead, the question of commission becomes an important one.

There are many artists belonging to the Variety Artists' Federation who would be only too pleased to withdraw their membership, but are afraid of being treated as "blacklegs," and so hounded out of the profession.

Why is it that some of the so-called agents who are reputed to be members of the Federation are asking to be allowed to become members of the Variety Agents' Association?

In conclusion, I might say that this Association has been very reticent to entertain the public with their grievances, but in justice to themselves they are obliged to publish their side of the question for public consideration.

I may mention that many so-called good V.A.F.'s and some of them members of the Executive Committee of the Variety Artists' Federation, are signing the office copy of the Variety Agents' Association every day, and I am certain most of them will do so as long as the salaries are according to their liking.—Yours faithfully,

A. L. FRANCIS CLARE,
Secretary, the Variety Agents' Association.

THE COLISEUM.

Those who love their Dickens—and who does not?—will have a refreshing experience when they see Mr. Bransby Williams, a remarkable character impersonator as well as a sound actor, who puts almost a touch of genius in his sketches. Seated at a table, he makes up rapidly in front of a mirror, and with a few touches changes from Micawber to Bill Sikes—a wonderful transformation. Then comes a tenderer touch, and the figure of the justly indignant Dan'l Peggoty, full of bitter thoughts for the dead man who has robbed him of his Little Em'ly, and made her a wanderer on the face of the earth. We do not suppose the young actor ever saw Sam Emery in the character; but he followed some of the traditions of that famous actor, and herein he is right. At any rate, he deeply interests us, the impersonation being wholly sympathetic and appealing. As an encore, Mr. Bransby Williams appears as an old showman, who announces his own appearance as Hamlet, and that the part of the first gravedigger is to be represented by the living skeleton, "who will perform a spade dance at Ophelia's grave."

Mr. Ernie Mayne, who is making his first appearance at the Coliseum, is the fortunate possessor of a quaint personality, and his humour is of that genial, sunny type which is a sure cure for melancholia. He is already a favourite with the patrons of the fine house in St. Martin's-lane, who laugh consumedly over his burlesque of the "Excelsior" duett by Balfe. Mr. Mayne gives it with the comedian of the cast for the baritone part, and his introduction of comic songs makes the "business" very diverting. We shall be seeing Mr. Mayne again at the Coliseum, and his future engagements are likely to add appreciably to the gaiety of London.

An intrepid cycling act is that of the Dunedin Troupe, members of a family that has added lustre in all parts of the world to the reputation of Britishers as exponents of difficult evolutions on the wheel. Their position has been won by the fine training of Mr. James E. Donegan, who has splendid material in his boys and girls. They are good to watch, and their extraordinary coolness and cleverness in the accomplishment of tricks beset with tremendous difficulty bring down the house. There is a warm welcome for Miss Harriet Vernon, who is adding to her high reputation as an actress-vocalist by her presentation of her pretty scena A Yuletide Story. Christmas festival is so full of suggestion for domestic sentiment that the author has had no difficulty in writing verses that are both sympathetic and appealing. The music, too, is good; and Miss Vernon, looking as handsome as ever, does complete justice to the theme, and is the recipient of many compliments.

Miss Cecilia Loftus is pursuing her triumphant career at the Coliseum, and large audiences are daily and nightly enjoying the charm of her imitations. The force of her versatility is great, as may be easily proved by the mere repetition of the subjects chosen by her:—Sara Bernhardt, Yvette Guilbert, Harry Lauder, Ethel Irving, Lily Elsie, Caruso, Mrs. Patrick Campbell, Vesta Victoria, Marie Dressler, and Josephine Sabel. Much diversion results from her mimetic sketch, The Lady, the Little Boy, and the Tramcar. Luis Alvarez is announced as a famous tenor from the Royal Opera House, Madrid; but by the way he sings "Songs of Araby" he has learnt English uncommonly well. He is a charming singer, and is loudly encored. The Pender Troupe rouse shouts of laughter by their "giant" business; and other turns in the fine bill directed by Mr. Dundas Slater are the Ellimans, Harry Marte, Nina Wood, a young and clever entertainer at the piano, who has a charming mezzo voice; Tom Hearn, the laziest juggler on earth, and one of the funniest; and Visions of Wagner. The Bioscope is always up to date.

Messrs. Fred Bowyer and Hermann E. Darewski, Jun., have just completed one of the funniest of acting duets. This item will be a prominent feature in many pantomimes.

The following numbers represent Mr. H. E. Darewski's successful songs that will be heard in almost every pantomime this year:—"Sue, Sue, Sue," sung by G. H. Elliott, and "Every fellow's in love with a girl," "Bombardier," "£ S. D.," and "Are you the little girl I met the other evening?"

Miss Florrie Forde, the great chorus singer, makes her reappearance at the Oxford on Monday next, when her feature song, "Oh! Oh! Antonio!" will be heard, sung by its original singer. This song will be the rage of the country ere many weeks are over.

Miss Evelyn Fowler, of the Bassos, at the Tivoli, Manchester, is one of the finest accompanists heard for a long while. She certainly is the main feature in the trio.

Messrs. Joseph Williams, of 32, Great Portland-street, W., have just published two pretty songs. The first is entitled "Sweet Constancy," words by Miss Rutherford and music by the well-known composer Florian Pascal. There is a pleasing sentiment in "Sweet Constancy," while neither the song nor piano accompaniment is too difficult for amateurs. Another advantage in this song, Miss Ruth Rutherford's verses are printed separately. If publishers would only print the verses of a song on a loose sheet the drawing-room tenor or soprano would be great benefited. Even the great Sims Reeves once forgot a verse in a popular song, and had to stop until it was shouted to him from all parts of the house.

The other song bears the title "Over the sea." Again the pleasing words are by Miss Ruth Rutherford, to the music of Esting Wayland. One of the verses:

"Hand in hand, let us watch the tide.
The gifts, my darling, scatter them wide;
But keep a heart full of love for me,
That is my treasure from over the sea"

give a good idea of the subject in "Over the sea," which, like "Sweet Constancy," contains a pleasing and appropriate melody.

One of the Von Tilzer Co.'s daintiest chorus songs for principal girls, entitled "Come to my Ivory Palace with me," has recently sprung into favour, and, judging by the number of pantomime permissions granted during the last week or two, this bright little number promises to become a big pantomime favourite. Numerous managers and producers have already secured this song for their "girls," notably Mr. J. F. Graham.

The Von Tilzer Music Co. are making a special feature of slide songs this season. Among those recently issued are "Since Daddy's been taken away," a pathetic ballad, and "You're my girl in the Springtime," which are special favourites, followed closely by two of these publishers' successful chorus ballads, "Don't forget, Mignonette," and "Not because your hair is curly," to both of which they have issued excellent sets of slides. Other numbers in preparation are "Let me return to Dreamland," "Just across the Bridge of Gold," and "Memories," which will be ready in a few weeks.

"Keepsakes" is the charming title of an equally charming little love ditty, which is steadily gaining in popularity among fairy queens and principal girls. The song possesses a very pretty melody, excellently adapted to the verses, and is altogether a capital little ballad. It is on the Von Tilzer Co.'s catalogue.

Lowenwirth and Cohan's great chorus song "My Little Eva," published by the National Music Publishing Co., will undoubtedly be a pantomime winner, having already been secured for almost every pantomime in Great Britain.

Fred Elton is making a gratifying success with the 100-guinea song, "When the leaves are tinged with gold." This number is going free for pantomime. The National Music Publishing Co. are the publishers.

Among other numbers being made free for pantomime by the National Music Publishing Co. are Geo. Lashwood's "If it's a lady" and "Nicolo, Nicolo, play on your piccolo"; Miss Victoria Monks' two big hits, "I wish I had a pal like you" and "Call round any old time"; and Will Godwin's "When I've a hundred pounds." The National Music Publishing Co. are the first to have a song on the coming roller-skating craze, entitled "Kate, won't you roller-skate?" This has an ear-haunting melody and a swinging chorus.

OPENING OF THE PALACE, OLDHAM.

On Monday evening the latest addition to the De Frece Circuit was opened to the public. The building has been erected from the plans of Mr. Bertie Crewe, of Shaftesbury-avenue, London, by Messrs. W. Brown and Sons, Salford, and presents a fine appearance. The interior bears a most cosy and comfortable aspect. The decorations are in the Louis XIV. style in white and gold, and the scheme of colour is dainty and attractive. There is seating accommodation for 2,380 in boxes, stalls, pit, and gallery, every person having an uninterrupted view of the stage. The stalls and centre are upholstered in red plush, the furnishing and carpets having been provided by A. R. Dean and Sons, of Birmingham. The scenery has been painted by Messrs. Wilkins, of Liverpool. The fireproof curtain and hydrants have been installed by Messrs. Strode and Co., London, and for the mosaic work Diespeker and Co., London, are responsible. The stage dimensions are 70ft. by 35ft., and the mechanical arrangements provide ample room for any kind of variety production. From stage to grid the height is 57ft.

At the opening on Monday were Mr. Walter de Frece, Mr. Jack de Frece, Mr. Will Sley, Major Savage, Mr. Bertie Crewe, Mr. C. Place, and others. Long before the time of opening large crowds were present, and a most animated scene was witnessed. When the doors were opened the crowd quickly filled the spacious building, and were heartily delighted at the appearance it presented. Mr. J. H. Southworth presided over a well-balanced orchestra.

A capital company is appearing for the opening week. At the head is Chas. Austin in a problematical production, Parker, P.C., and hearty laughter is caused by the many funny situations. The Harmony Four in their original musical comedy provided a diverting entertainment; Les Aribos in a sensational acrobatic act gain a hearty reception; Fred Russell is effective in his ventriloquial act; Alf. Gibson is quaint in his own original way; Flo Cecil is a charming comedienne and dancer; Fyne and Hurley, "the coster and the swell," introduce smart boxing into their turn; Maid and Moon are capital in a very pretty scena; and Ruffell's Bioscope depicts a very amusing picture.

At the Empire Music Hall, Wrexham, Will Hebden has drawn good houses, and proved himself as successful a comedian as ever; Syd Crossley, the "long eccentric one," met with a good reception; Miss Bessie Willow is a clever burlesque artist and ballad vocalist; and Shavo is a very comical juggler. The pictures, too, are a great attraction.

BOW PALACE.

Had any evidence been necessary to establish the great hold a piece of fine sentimental acting has upon a London music hall audience it would have been found this week at the Bow Palace, where Mr. Albert Wyndham has been presenting his well-known playlet Prince Arthur. Anything more deeply pathetic than this little drama cannot well be conceived. A short dialogue takes place between Hubert and the French Ambassador, in which the mode of putting out the eyes of the captive Prince is outlined. The fierce determination of Hubert, the cringing of the serf, the conflicting emotions—all impress the audience in the first scene. When the curtain rises on the second—the Prince's chamber in the Tower—we see at a rude altar the kneeling form of Arthur, and the rich notes of his voice are in strong contrast to the deep tones of his gaoler, who bursts in upon him and in cold tones bids him prepare for the torture. Stern and unrelenting, Hubert stands, but cowers before the innocent trustfulness of the boy. The irons are heated and the callous gaoler faces his young charge, who pleads passionately for his sight. All through the piece there is a depth of feeling, an undisguised pathos, which evokes warm applause. As Hubert Mr. Albert Wyndham's fine emotional power makes the part impressive, and Miss Paula Shephard is responsible for a touching representation of the young Prince Arthur. Chatellion, the French Ambassador, in the hands of Mr. Chas. Whitley, and the Executioner (Mr. L. Deveridge) and the Herald (Miss F. Pateman) showed care.

Malcolm Cumming's company appeared in a new dental burlesque on Monday, entitled

"A TOOTH FOR A WIFE."

Nicholas Poolhard .....Mr. Edmond O'Grady
Dora .....Miss Madeleine Sylvester
Ferdinand Algernon Fitz Bang Byngs
Mr. Malcolm Cumming

The scene is a dentist's surgery. The dentist, a particularly irascible person with a charming daughter to dispose of in the matrimonial market, has acted upon his own avaricious impulses and pledged his daughter's hand to the rich son of his bosom friend, old Mr. Byngs. The daughter has, however, secretly plighted her troth to the good-looking suitor who is familiarly termed Ferdinand—and Ferdinand only—the wonderful surname never coming to light in the harangue between father and daughter. Leaving the self-willed daughter in the midst of her heated denunciations of the rich aristocrat of her father's choice, the dentist goes out to find the beau he has selected, and just as Dora is giving way to depression, the chivalrous Ferdinand makes a dramatic appearance on the scene. Of course the "passage-at-arms" is of the familiar type, and well-worn epithets associated with the "smitten"; but just when the lovemaking is at its height the dentist is heard returning. Too late to pass out by the front door, the window too high to drop, the daughter impulsively presses the now very timorous Ferdinand to pass himself off as a patient. Checkmated at either hand, the unfortunate Ferdinand is under the circumstances forced to submit.

The dentist enters in a rage. His mission to the rich suitor has been unsuccessful, and he turns to upbraid his defiant daughter, only to let his gaze fall on the emaciated form of Ferdinand in the operating chair. "A tooth to be drawn? Yes, it must come out." And poor ill-used Ferdinand struggles heroically in the powerful grasp of the dentist and the forceps. Dora, with her natural aversion to agony, quits the room, and, left alone, dentist and patient go through a pantomimical succession of contortions rich with originality and humour. After a period of suffering which to Ferdinand might be gauged by the expression of his countenance, the tooth is at last drawn, and through the window at lightning speed he disappears, fearful lest an instant's delay might bring about a repetition of the torture. Dora now reappears on the scene, and boldly asks where her beloved Ferdinand is. Perplexity is now the order, but just as the confusion is at its greatest Ferdinand returns for his hat. His full identity now transpires. The dentist is dumbstricken: "Ferdinand Algernon Fitz Bang Byngs?" he asked, querulously. "My name," murmurs the soft-voiced Ferdinand. "What, the son of my old friend Byngs?" The similarity is compared. "Why, old fellow," is the dentist's soothing consolation, "you're the very boy I've been in search of. Take the girl, my boy, you've earned her." "Yes," somewhat cheerfully responds the smiling Ferdinand, "a tooth for a wife is a fair exchange."

For a piece of really vivacious humour, the sketch is very high in excellence. The pantomimic gyrations reveal an originality which is sustained in every feature. Bright, bracing, and refined, with a complete disregard of the low order of buffoonery which is so much in evidence in comedy sketches of this kind. The selection of the characters disclosed keen judgment, and the reception of the sketch was enthusiastic.

Albert St. Clair is an entertaining double-voiced vocalist; and the items of Moon and Morris, the Sivronis (burlesque artists), and the Gascoignes (jugglers) are all much appreciated. The Selwyns are capital vocalists and dancers.

Sweet Innisfail, an Irish comedy-drama, is well played by the Walter Reynolds company. The sketch is picturesquely mounted; but as it is supposed to represent the present-day sobriety, it cannot in justice be described as anything short of the flighty product of some admirer of Charles Lever. Happily this view of things was not reflected, and a mild applause greeted the efforts of the company. Bouncing a Burglar was diverting, and a good exhibition of animated pictures also figured in the programme. Zeta Russell,—her hall-mark "Refinement"—charmed all. Her song and dance, both characteristic of natural daintiness, delighted everyone.

"ALL AT SEA."

To the Editor of The Era

Sir,—In your issue of Oct. 17 I read that Messrs. Edward Foster and Guy Jones intend exploiting in the music halls a short musical comedy entitled All at Sea,

I wish to call your attention to the fact that the same is the title of a two-act three-scene musical comedy by me, the undersigned, which made two provincial tours under the management of Mr. Alex. Keith, with Mr. Harry Phydora and Miss Julia Kent in the principal parts. As I am at present in negotiation with a firm of New York vaudeville managers for the production of a condensed version of my own All at Sea, with a probability of booking the same for London, I shall feel greatly obliged if you will publish this letter in your valuable paper in justice to myself and to notify all whom it may concern.—Yours faithfully,

"ALL ABOUT A BOUT."

Frank Conroy .....Mr. Frank A. Gotch
Atlas Stetzel .....Mr. Emil Klank
Bill Goggin .....Mr. George Porter Smith
Pittsburg Snow .....Mr. Joseph Burton
Walter Alan Lucas .....Mr. Ralph Stewart
Grace Conroy .....Miss Louise Carter
Aunt Susan .....Miss Maude Mullery

A very large audience assembled at New Cross Empire on Monday night to witness the production, for the first time in London, of the athletic sketch written round the wrestler Frank A. Gotch. The plot is of the slightest, but it is clear and intelligible. The hero, Frank Conroy, belonging to Yale University, is a famous strong man. He has an Aunt Susan, who is opposed to all sport, and in particular to anything which might reflect on the honoured name of Conroy. Frank also has a sister named Grace, who is her brother's confidante, and who firmly believes that whatever he does is right. It is proposed that he shall meet and wrestle with Atlas Stetzel, the "holder of the title," for a large sum. Aunt Susan vigorously opposes, but Grace persuades her that the money is necessary to him, as they are ruined, and the old lady finally gives way. In the meantime Bill Goggin has interviewed Frank, and told him that he has staked all he possesses on his success. Frank gives in, and goes to meet Stetzel. Scene 2 shows the front of Madison-square Gardens, New York. The family serving-man, Pittsburg Spow, arrives first. He is soon followed by Grace Conroy and Aunt Susan, who have come to witness Frank's success. Scene 3 shows the arena, where the last bout is just commencing, two having already taken place, one being credited to each man. The wrestling is followed with close attention, and proves Gotch to be smart and clever. He also plays the part of Frank Conroy with ease and self-possession. He is ably assisted by Mr. Emil Klank, who does well as Atlas Stetzel, the Austrian strong man. Mr. George Porter Smith is very good as Bill Goggins; Mr. Joseph Burton makes an amusing Pittsburg Snow; Miss Louise Carter is a bright and taking Grace Conroy; and Miss Maude Mullery is excellent as Aunt Susan.

There were some dissentient voices at the fall of the curtain on Monday, but Mr. Ernest Bridgen appeared and restored order by showing on the Bioscope the original tussle between Hackenschmidt and Gotch.

Influential support is being obtained for next year's attraction at Earl's Court—"The Golden West and American Industries Exhibition"—and already the Exhibition Commissioners in America report that the leather, oil, carriage, and motor sections promise to be of great importance, whilst the number of the various States and corporations which desire to be represented is growing daily.

The lighter side will be judiciously welded with the serious aspect of the exhibition, and contracts have been made with American impresarios—amongst many, the great Coney Island attractions of "The Deluge" and "The Spirit of Niagara," whilst in the Empress Hall an arenic Red Indian spectacle will be the prominent feature.

A roller-skating rink will be opened on Tuesday in Cliftonville-road, Belfast, by a syndicate, of which Mr. C. P. Crawford and Mr. F. A. Wilkins are managing-directors. The skating area will be 300ft. long and 120ft. wide, and an excellent maple flooring has been imported from America in order that a good surface may be secured. A military band will contribute music at each session, of which there will be three daily.

ACROBATIC DANCERS' ACTION.

"The Two Primroses," whose names off the music-hall stage are the Misses Edith Mary and Florence Elizabeth Atkinson, claimed compensation on Tuesday from the Surrey Vaudeville Theatre Company, Ltd., for an accident which happened at the theatre in Blackfriars-road two years ago.

Their case, as presented to Mr. Justice Ridley and a special jury, was that, as a result of the accident, Edith sustained permanent injuries to her spine, which would leave her a cripple for the rest of her life, and Florence received a blow on the right side of the head which interfered with her work.

In defence the Macnaghten company denied negligence, and contended that Florence was not injured, and that Edith fell as the result of delicate health and exhaustion. It was further urged that, if there was negligence on the part of the company's servants, they and the Two Primroses were in common employment.

The sisters, it was stated, began on the halls at a very early age, Florence being only six. On Oct. 30, 1905, they were engaged to perform at the Surrey. Theirs was the first "turn," and they sang and danced for about five minutes, "finishing with a high kick." Just as they were concluding their performance the curtain fell upon them—and the curtain in a theatre is an exceedingly weighty affair. Mr. Dobb, who narrated this on their behalf, mentioned that the girls had tried to get compensation earlier, but they were non-suited in the early part of this year without prejudice to their commencing a fresh action.

It was argued between counsel for the sisters and Mr. Rawlinson, K.C., for the company, that it was unnecessary for Edith to be examined. Mr. Dobb said she could be carried into Court if it was thought desirable she should formally substantiate her sister's assertion that the curtain struck them. Mr. Rawlinson said he was prepared to infer that she would swear that, but he would not admit that it was a correct explanation of how she was injured.

Miss Florence Atkinson then told the Court how the curtain fell. In answer to questions she said theirs was an exhausting "turn." She had to put her foot behind her head and twist round, her sister going through her contortions "on the floor" at the time. She did not consult a doctor because she was nervous of them.

Mrs. Atkinson, mother of the plaintiffs, who was at the side of the stage, said she saw the stage-manager go towards the switchboard, and at that moment the curtain fell.

Mr. Rawlinson was putting questions to the mother with reference to the general health of herself and Edith, when the lady exclaimed: "Do I look delicate?"

Mr. Rawlinson: If you ask me—but I must not pay compliments here.

A large model of the Surrey stage was produced in Court to illustrate points in the evidence, and among witnesses examined during the afternoon was Dr. Baldwin. He expressed the opinion that Edith Atkinson would not again be able to follow her occupation as an acrobat, her spine having been seriously injured.

At the commencement of Mr. Rawlinson's speech for the defence on Wednesday, Mr. Justice Ridley intimated that he need only address himself to the question whether or not the plaintiffs were struck by the curtain. He need not address the jury on the plea of common employment.

In summing up, his lordship said the main question for the jury was whether or not there had been negligence on the part of the defendants which would entitle plaintiffs to recover damages. Did defendants' servants negligently let down the curtain so that it knocked over both the plaintiffs, Edith in such a way that she was severely injured, and Florence only slightly? In his opinion, although it was for the jury to decide, there was no evidence of damage at all in regard to Florence.

After being absent for over an hour and a half, the jury announced that they found that the accident was caused by the fall of the curtain, and they awarded Edith Atkinson £705 damages. They were not satisfied that the evidence showed that Florence Atkinson received any injuries from the fall of the curtain, but she was entitled to damages for the loss of employment through her sister's accident, and they awarded her £12 16s. 3d.

Mr. Dobb asked for judgment for the plaintiffs.

His lordship said he could not give him judgment until he had heard the arguments upon the question of common employment. On this point he thought judgment ought to be entered for the defendants.

On Friday the question of common employment, raised by the theatre company, was argued before Mr. Justice Ridley. After hearing counsel for the plaintiffs on this point the Judge found that the doctrine of common employment applied, and that therefore the plaintiffs could not maintain their action, and he accordingly directed judgment to be entered for the theatre company, with costs.

Counsel for the plaintiffs were Mr. Harry Dobb and Mr. Wynn Werninck (instructed by Mr. A. E. Cubison) and for the defendants Mr. J. F. P. Rawlinson, K.C., M.P., and Mr. Harold Brandon (instructed by Messrs. Amery, Parkes, Macklin and Co.).

Miss Amy Augarde appealed on the 6th from an order of Mr. Justice Coleridge in chambers granting an interim injunction restraining her from performing in a sketch entitled La Carmençita, adapted for the music halls by Mr. Louis Cohen, plaintiff in the action, without his name appearing on the playbills and programmes as the author. On behalf of the appellant, Mr. Charles Doughty said that Mr. Cohen sold the copyright of the sketch to Miss Augarde for £50. At the time of that transaction it was understood that Mr. Cohen's name should appear on the bills and programmes. It was possible that on some occasions his name had been omitted; but, counsel submitted, under the agreement lately entered into as a sequel to the variety artists' strike, managers must not be dictated to in such matters as the one in question. After hearing argument by counsel in support of the order, Lords Justices Moulton and Farwell held that the case was not one for an interim injunction, and they discharged it, making the costs the costs in the action.

Lafayette, illusionist, had a wire on Tuesday at Nottingham to say that his father, residing in Germany, was dangerously ill. Under these circumstances he was released by Mr. Thomas Barrasford and hurried abroad.

Mr. Charles Leighton on Monday forwarded a telegram of congratulation to His Majesty the King upon the occasion of his birthday, and on Monday evening was honoured with a telegram of acknowledgment which reads as follows:—"Sandringham, Nov. 9, 1908. (To) Charles Leighton, Vaudeville Club, Charing Cross-road, W.C.—King commands me to thank you for your loyal congratulations and good wishes.—Knollys."

MUSIC HALL LICENCES.

The Theatres and Music Halls Committee of the London County Council sat at the Sessions House, Clerkenwell, on the 6th inst., for the purpose of hearing applications for licences for music, music and dancing, and stage plays. Mr. H. J. Greenwood presided, and the other members of the committee present were Lord Duncannon, Mr. Jocelyn Brandon, Dr. John Davies, Mr. E. E. Wild, Mr. R. C. Phillimore, Mr. J. A. Dawes, and Mr. F. Briant.

The committee had to deal with 220 applications for renewals, eight applications for transfers, three applications for removal of restrictions, and twenty-two applications for new licences, on the north side of the Thames; and 102 applications for renewals, nine applications for transfers, and seven applications for new licences on the south of the Thames.

FRANCO-BRITISH EXHIBITION.

Mr. Irme Kiralfy applied for a renewal of the music and dancing and stage-plays licences of the Franco-British Exhibition.

The application was opposed by Mr. C. Rambeau, of 40, Arminger-road, Shepherd's Bush, on the grounds that the buildings of the exhibition are only temporary and unfitted for a licence, and that the continued existence of an exhibition at the site in question would be detrimental to the neighbourhood, and not likely to be of benefit to the public generally.

Mr. C. Pinhorn, secretary of the London United Temperance Council, also opposed the renewal, on the ground that the sale of intoxicating drink is not necessary or desirable in a place of public entertainment.

Mr. Horace Avory, K.C., and Mr. Moyse Thomas appeared on behalf of Mr. Rambeau.

Mr. A. H. Bodkin supported the renewal on behalf of Mr. Irme Kiralfy.

Mr. C. Gill, K.C., said he appeared to oppose on behalf of Exhibitions (Limited).

Mr. Bodkin: We have received no notice of opposition from them.

The Chairman: Neither has the committee. Consequently we cannot hear Mr. Gill.

Mr. Gill: Then I suppose I must be content with watching.

Mr. Horace Avory said that a provisional licence, granted in November last, had never been confirmed or made good by the Council. Therefore the place had been conducted illegally in that sense. There had been a liquor licence in force, granted in February last by the Kensington magistrates, and that licence was obtained from the Bench on the statement, repeated over and over again, that it was only intended to occupy these buildings for the purpose of the Franco-British Exhibition, and that at the expiration of that exhibition the buildings would be removed. The opposition to the liquor licence was induced to withdraw on the ground that the licence should be granted for one year only, whereas now it seemed to be a permanent exhibition and a permanent nuisance in the neighbourhood.

Mr. Pinhorn pointed out that there would be no Franco-British Exhibition next year, and consequently this should be treated as a new application.

Mr. Avory: I would also point out that some of the conditions on which the provisional licence was granted have never up to this time been fulfilled.

The Chairman: Are you going to call any witnesses?

Mr. Avory: No; I understand Mr. Rambeau is not here.

The Chairman: Then Mr. Bodkin has no case to answer, but we should like to ask Mr. Kiralfy a few questions.

Mr. Imre Kiralfy then went into the witness-box.

The Chairman: With regard to a stage play's licence, for what purpose are you requiring it?—I was under the impression that it was necessary, but I understand now that it would not be required.

There has been no building suitable for a stage-play's licence. If it is required you can apply for that at any time?—Yes, I understand that now.

In view of the past exhibition I should like to point out that, suppose the licence is granted, it must be understood that any modification which may have been made or conditions waived during the present year will not apply to any future exhibition, and that in every detail the committee would have to be satisfied regarding the buildings before any opening is possible. Nothing that has been done in regard to the Franco-British Exhibition will tie the committee in any way in dealing with the future. It was common knowledge that the sanitary conveniences were wholly insufficient. There would probably be a considerable increase in the requirements made by the committee in that direction.

Mr. Kiralfy: I will undertake to comply with any requirements the committee may make.

The Chairman: The committee will also make a condition that there shall be increased facilities for obtaining drinking water.

Mr. Kiralfy: I have already done that.

The Chairman: Subject to an undertaking on the points I have mentioned, the committee will recommend the Council to grant a provisional licence for music and dancing.

Mr. Avory: May I ask Mr. Kiralfy for what purpose this licence is required?

The Chairman: No, you cannot go into that.

THE COLISEUM.

Mr. Oswald Stoll applied for the removal of the following restriction attached to the present music and dancing licence of the London Coliseum, namely, "That no intoxicating drinks shall be sold or consumed on the premises."

Mr. Gill, K.C., who supported the application, said this was the only place of public entertainment such as a theatre or music-hall in London, as distinguished from the suburbs, where the restriction was enforced. The directors felt that this was most unfair, especially as they catered for a superior class of audience, many of whom came from a long distance in the suburbs. There appeared to be no logical reason why this house and the Hippodrome should be selected for forcing upon people a restriction whereby they were bound to leave the premises if they wanted to obtain that which they were perfectly entitled to obtain. In order to test what was really the demand for intoxicants by the patrons of the Coliseum, Mr. Stoll had a record made on Oct. 17, and it was found that during the interval no fewer than 544 persons left the hall. This application was not made for the purpose of adding to the dividends of the shareholders, for the directors were willing to give an undertaking that an accurate account should be kept of the takings of the three bars, and that the whole of the profits should be given to any charity which the committee might nominate.

Mr. Oswald Stoll then went into the box, and, in answer to Mr. Gill, said his patrons were very seriously inconvenienced by the restriction, especially those of them who objected to going into public-houses.

Mr. Gill: I have stated that you are willing to take any steps with regard to the sale of intoxicants, so that the profits might be applied as the committee may direct?—Yes. The board has passed a resolution to that effect.

The Chairman: Did you watch to see whether all the people who went out during the interval went into public-houses?

Mr. Stoll: Anybody could see that by the state of the adjoining public-houses during the interval.

The Chairman: They might have left the theatre for the purpose of getting fresh air.

Mr. Stoll: It was perfectly obvious where they went.

Mr. G. B. Walker, district superintendent of the United Kingdom Alliance, opposed the removal of the restrictions on the ground that the sale of intoxicating drink was not necessary or desirable in a place of public entertainment, that the neighbourhood was well supplied with licences for the sale of intoxicating liquor, and that, therefore, the licence should only be granted on the condition that no intoxicating drink be sold on the premises. He further contended that the committee ought not to be influenced by the inducement held out that the profits of the bars would be devoted to charity.

The Chairman said the committee would hear the application for the removal of the restriction in the case of the Hippodrome, and then retire to consider their decision in both cases.

THE HIPPODROME.

Mr. Gill said he appeared on behalf of Sir Horace Edward Moss for a removal of a similar restriction, and all he had to add to his former statement was that when the Hippodrome was built it was anticipated that an unrestricted licence would be granted, and in fact it was granted, and it was only in the following year that by one vote only on a snatch division the restriction was made.

Mr. Walker said he opposed for the same reasons as in the case of the Coliseum.

Mr. Pinhorn also opposed on behalf of the London United Temperance Council.

The committee then retired, and on returning to court,

The Chairman stated that in the case of the Coliseum the committee would recommend the renewal of the licence subject to a condition that no intoxicants should be sold or consumed on the premises. With regard to the Hippodrome, the committee would recommend that the licence be renewed subject to a condition that no intoxicants be sold or consumed in the auditorium.

LEWISHAM HIPPODROME.

Mr. Arthur Algernon Wellesley Grist applied for a music and dancing licence for premises to be erected at Rushey Green, and to be known as the Lewisham Hippodrome.

The application was opposed by the Rev. W. W. Hough, the Rev. F. C. Bainbridge-Bell, and the Rev. R. W. Harding, on the ground that in their opinion a music hall was not needed, that it would be objectionable to the inhabitants, and that it would tend to lower the character of the neighbourhood.

The Chairman said a notice had been received to the effect that the opposition would be withdrawn subject to the licence being granted with the restriction that no intoxicating liquors should be sold or consumed on the premises. The Council would, therefore, be recommended to grant the licence in that form.

CROWN THEATRE, PECKHAM.

Mr. George Elliott applied, on behalf of Mr. Cecil Paget, for a music and dancing licence for the Crown Theatre, Peckham. He said Mr. Paget had held the Lord Chamberlain's licence for some years, and had provided high-class theatrical entertainments, but, unfortunately, the local residents had not given him that encouragement which would justify those entertainments being continued. He therefore wanted to exchange the Lord Chamberlain's licence for a music and dancing licence, and he was prepared to surrender the Excise licence.

The Chairman said the licence would be granted, subject to the usual condition that no intoxicants should be sold or consumed on the premises.

CAMDEN THEATRE.

Mr. George Eliot, in support of the application, said the Camden was a very fine building, and was one of the most commodious in London. What the proprietors desired to do was to relinquish the Lord Chamberlain's licence, and in taking up a music and dancing licence under the Council the liquor licence would be abandoned.

Mr. Marler said his only desire was to carry on an ordinary performance of a music hall, such as Mr. Walter Gibbons carried on in several parts of London.

Mr. Avory, K.C., who opposed on behalf of Mr. B. P. Lucas, the managing-director of the Bedford Palace of Varieties, asked if it was intended to give two performances each evening. The witness said he thought that was the idea of the management, but it would be left in the hands of Mr. Walter Gibbons.

Mr. Travers Humphreys opposed for Mr. J. H. Freeman, of 53, Oakley-square, St. Pancras, on the ground that those responsible for the management of the Camden Theatre had been giving and continued to give entertainments on Sundays and weekdays consisting of animated pictures combined with music, which were a source of great annoyance to the inhabitants of Oakley-square.

Mr. Avory said there were two grounds on which he opposed on behalf of Mr. Lucas. The first was that the Bedford Palace of Varieties was only 289 yards away, and that there was no public need for another music hall there; and, secondly, that the Committee ought not to grant a licence to any man who had been concerned in simply carrying on a music hall without a licence.

Mr. Bodkin opposed on behalf of a number of local residents, and in support of his opposition he called the Rev. H. S. Beard, vicar of St. Matthews, Oakley-square, the Rev. A. Butcher, of the London Central Wesleyan Mission, and Mr. W. L. Taylor, J. P., one of the guardians of the poor for St. Pancras.

The Chairman announced that the committee would recommend the granting of the licence subject to a condition that no intoxicants be sold or consumed on the premises.

FINSBURY PARK EMPIRE.

Mr. Oswald Stoll applied for a music and dancing licence for the Finsbury Park Empire, which it is proposed to erect at the junction of St. Thomas's-road and Prah-road.

Mr. Gill, K.C., who supported the application, reminded the committee that on a former occasion they recommended that the licence be granted, but when it came before the Council the voting was equal, and the licence was accordingly not granted.

Mr. Stoll, in reply to Mr. Gill, said in the event of this licence being granted he was prepared to surrender the licence of the Holloway Empire.

Several witnesses were called by Mr. Gill to state that the erection of the proposed hall, so far from injuring the surrounding property, would be a great improvement. All these witnesses were owners of property in the immediate vicinity of the site.

Mr. George Elliott opposed on behalf of local residents, and called the Rev. L. L. Edwards, vicar of St. Thomas's, Finsbury Park, who stated that he considered it unfair to the neighbourhood to plump a place of public entertainment in the midst of dwelling-houses off the main road, and away from the business thoroughfare; and also that it was unfair to the neighbourhood to build a house which would professedly cater for people who came from rough neighbourhoods.

Mr. J. J. Shrosbree, of 30, Gloucester-road, Green-lanes, gave it as his opinion that the value of adjacent property of which he is the owner would be greatly depreciated, and that the quiet character of the neighbourhood would be disturbed.

Mr. Elliott, in addressing the committee, urged that Finsbury Park did not want a music hall, because the people who lived there could get easy access to any part of London where music halls exist. He put in a petition containing 1,735 signatures against the granting of the licence.

Mr. S. S. Christey, one of the Hornsey borough councillors, opposed on behalf of the local Ratepayers' Association, and on the ground that the granting of the licence would seriously injure the prospects of the Alexandra Palace, which had been purchased at a cost of £150,000 by the local authorities.

The committee retired for consultation, and on returning,

The Chairman announced that the licence would be recommended to the Council to be granted subject to the usual restrictions that no intoxicants be sold or consumed on the premises.

PADDINGTON EMPIRE.

Mr. Austin Heyes applied for music and dancing licences for the Paddington Empire, proposed to be erected on the sites of 68, 68a, and 68b, Harrow-road. Mr. W. Stevenson opposed on several grounds, among them being that the applicant was acting as agent on behalf of the proprietor of an existing place of entertainment, and that he was not acting bonâ-fide in his own right, and that there were already more than sufficient places of entertainment in the neighbourhood.

Mr. Henri Gros, the licencee and managing director of the Metropolitan Palace of Varieties, opposed on the ground that the proposed hall would be only 560 yards from the Metropolitan, which had been this year rebuilt and enlarged at a cost of £10,000

The Rev. R. Roberts, minister of St. Paul's Presbyterian Church, Westbourne-grove, and the Rev. W. E. Clemens, curate of St. Paul's, Harrow-road, also opposed on the usual religious grounds.

The Borough Council of Paddington also opposed the application.

After hearing several witnesses on both sides the committee recommended the Council to refuse the application.

This concluded the whole of the licensing work of the committee, and this was the first occasion on which both sides of the river were dealt with in one day.

THE Merry Brooklands have returned from America after three months' successful engagements. They open on Monday at the Hippodrome, Stockton, with a new scena.

SIMON SILVERMAN, 21, a Russian subject, but speaking fluent English, was charged with wilful damage at the Shoreditch Empire, and further with assaulting Mr. H. Pitt, the manager. About 10.30 on Friday night, the 6th, there was a disturbance in the upper balcony, and attendants sent up had to order the prisoner to leave. As he did so he flung back one of the heavy doors with such violence that it was broken from its hinges. An attempt was made to detain him, whereupon he struck Mr. Pitt a blow behind the ear. In defence, Silverman denied the disturbance being his fault, but Mr. Pitt said he had known the prisoner for some time as leading a "claque," whose only object was to create trouble if they were not recognised and "arranged with." Prisoner, who was fined 40s., or fourteen days, went to prison

"INFANT" ARTIST'S CONTRACT.

At Westminster County Court, on Thursday, Mr. Thomas Claxton, variety agent, of Charing Cross-road, sued Miss Norah Mabel Stockelle, music-hall artist, for £5 12s. 6d., being five per cent. commission on an egagement he obtained for her to play in South Africa, at a salary of £12 10s. a week. Defendant admitted the signing of the contract, and did not dispute the amount, but pleaded that she was under age at the time.

Mr. Nicholson, for the defendant, called Mrs. Mary Stockelle, who produced her daughter's birth certificate, which showed that she was born in 1889; the contract was signed in August, 1907. Witness admitted that her daughter had toured this country without a chaperone.

Mr. Page, for the plaintiff, argued that the contract was for the defendant's benefit, and that, therefore, she was liable.

His Honour Judge Woodfall: I do not think anyone would say that it was good for this young lady to go out to South Africa without a chaperone. But I think the Court may look at the whole of the contract and say whether it was for the infant's benefit, and I think it is entirely restricted to the financial benefit of the contract, and, as far as I know, no Court has ever interfered on moral grounds.

For the plaintiff, Mr. Sydney Hyman, variety agent, said that every three weeks he sent out parties of artists to South Africa. All fares were paid both ways, and there was an hotel where the artists could go at a uniform charge of £3 a week. He paid in travelling expenses alone about £10,000 a year. Whenever a young girl was going out to perform under contract, he always arranged that she should be looked after by a married couple or some responsible person. The defendant would have gone out to South Africa in the company of Miss Florence St. John and Mr. and Mrs. Roxburgh, and the same company would be together for the fifteen weeks of the tour.

His Honour, in giving judgment, said he was clearly of opinion that this contract was for the girl's financial benefit, and he was also of opinion that she was quite competent to act for herself in making an advantageous contract in her own profession. It was inconceivable that she should have entered into the contract if it had not been for her benefit, and she would have gone to South Africa had not her mother objected. It was very much to defendant's credit, but it did not affect the legal rights of the plaintiff, who had earned his commission, which defendant must pay. There would be judgment for the plaintiff, with costs.

Mr. Nicholson asked for leave to appeal, and mentioned that he represented the Variety Artists' Federation.

His Honour expressed surprise that the Federation were appearing in the action, and refused the application, pointing out that there would be the usual stay of execution, and defendant must apply again.

MISS MABEL SINCLAIR IN AMERICA.

ENGLISH GIRL MAKES A HIT AT ORPHEUM.

Beyond doubt Miss Mabel Sinclair is one of the greatest ventriloquists in the world, and it is doubtful if any other woman ventriloquist ever surpassed her in the art by means of which she has become famous.—Butte Intermountain, Sept. 1, '08, U.S.A.

Miss Mabel Sinclair is announced as the foremost lady ventriloquist of England; she is more than that, if she has an equal anywhere, lady or gentleman, the people of Butte will have to wait a while longer to see it; Miss Sinclair does the little trick most cleverly, and her amusing talking doll sings popular songs while she is smoking a cigarette.—The Anaconda Standard, Montana, Aug. 30, '08.

The programme is varied by a smart ventriloquial trick by Mabel Sinclair, an English human with a natural voice and articulation which American women would do well to hear and imitate. Her ability as a ventriloquist both in speaking and singing is of a very high order, and her turn on the programme is well worth seeing.—Seattle Daily Times, Washington, Sept. 15, '08.

Miss Mabel Sinclair, a ventriloquist direct from London, has for her dummy the figure of a costermonger, and her bright line of patter in the coster dialect is humorous and catchy, though the concluding feature of her performance, and one that is wildly commented on, is that of smoking a cigarette while she does the entire act with a strong spotlight focused upon her, and not a single muscle of her throat is seen to quiver.—Spokane Review, Washington, Sept. 6, '08.

Miss Mabel Sinclair, the English ventriloquist, is delightfully entertaining with her bright little act. While she throws her voice she smokes a cigarette to prove the wonderful control she has over the vocal chords.—Salt Lake Evening Telegram, Monday, Oct. 5, 1908.

Some novel experiments in clever ventriloquism are given by Miss Mabel Sinclair, who has an act that is easily worth while.—Salt Lake Herald, Oct. 5, 1908.

Miss Mabel Sinclair, who smokes a cigarette on the stage to show the control of her vocal chords, is a most clever ventriloquist. She is fresh from London, and is a valuable acquisition to the Orpheum circuit.—The Republican, Salt Lake, Oct. 5, 1908.

As a ventriloquial artist Mabel Sinclair did the best work in ventriloquism ever seen here, and her dummy appears to be almost human, so perfectly does she do her work.—Salt Lake Tribune, Oct. 5, 1908.

Wigston Feast.

Our Leicester representative writes:—"Wigston, a thriving and rapidly-growing town, within four-and-a-half miles of the county borough of Leicester, held its annual feast on Saturday, Sunday, Monday, and Tuesday last, when satisfactory business is to be recorded all round. The fairground is just inside Old Wigston, off the Leicester road, and presented an animated appearance, the principal attraction being Charles Thurston's new Royal show, where some first-class pictures are displayed under the management of Mr. James H. Norman. Professor Elliott's boxing show was another popular feature. Other showmen and caterers on the ground included Thurston's racing electric motors, A. Neal's galloping horses, G. Neal's juvenile motors, A. Neal's swing boats, Charles Thurston's flip-flap, houp-la games by Barnett and Charles Thurston; shooters by W. Morgan, G. Neal, J. Neal, &c.; skittle alleys by T. Neal, &c.; cokers by Essoms, Godden, &c.; and gingerbread by T. Neal, H. Stokes, &c. At the termination of the feast part left for Loughborough and part for Melton Mowbray."

New Brighton Wild West.

On Wednesday, in the presence of a large attendance, the stock of ponies, weapons, cowboys' riding suits, camps, and effects belonging to the Cummings Wild West show, which during the summer put in a season at New Brighton Tower Grounds, were sold by auction. The majority of the property was purchased at very reasonable figures, the American mail coach, which was used in the Indian attack, being knocked down for 35s. The result of the season's work was not, we understand, altogether satisfactory, while a number of horses had to be destroyed through an outbreak of glanders.

A SHOWMAN WORTHY.

THE LATE WILLIAM SHUTTLEWORTH.

There passed away on Oct. 13, after a short illness, a showman worthy, whose unblemished life and sterling example has been a gospel of good works for many years upon the road. William Shuttleworth started business as an amusement caterer thirty-five years ago, his first enterprise being a large set of park swings. Prospering in his business he added smaller swings, overboats, and gem horses to his working plant. Three years ago, at the very commencement of their great popularity, he introduced his latest machine—the racing juvenile motor-cars. For many years past Mr. Shuttleworth has specialised as the provider of children's machines and swings, and, in fact, it is claimed for him that he was the oldest juvenile amusement caterer on the great Lancashire round of fairs and wakes.

Realising the possibilities of the business some years ago, he began to originate and to establish new "wakes," in the fast-growing industrial district, of which his native town of Oldham was the great centre. Born in Oldham in February, 1849, he passed away to his rest in his sixtieth year. He had not been so well in bodily health and strength, but was active and energetic up to five weeks before his death. He succumbed to chronic catarrh of the stomach, his last moments being comforted by the presence of his family at their permanent address, 44, Eldon-street, Oldham.

For many years past Mr. Shuttleworth has exercised a great influence amongst his fellow-showmen at the fairs he travelled, and for five years past has been a hard-working member of the executive committee of the Showmen's Guild. In that period of time he has enrolled over one hundred new members, and in every possible way has kept the claims of the Trade Defence Society before the people for whom it works.

It is such hard-working, thoroughly sincere, and unassuming men as William Shuttleworth, that give honour, dignity, and respect to the trade and business of the fairground. The Executive Council of the Showmen's Guild will sorely miss his sound business sense, breadth of view, and enduring charity, and it is to us to whom has fallen the melancholy task of recording the story of his life a source of the greatest possible satisfaction that we have been identified so long and so helpfully (on his part) in great enterprises for God and for good amongst the showmen of the Empire.

The Funeral.

The last solemn obsequies were from the home address of the family, and the interment took place in the family vault, Greenacres Cemetery, Oldham, on Oct. 16, 1908. The coffin was of solid panelled oak, and was conveyed in an open glass hearse, and there were six mourning coaches containing the family and intimate friends. In the first coach were Mrs. Shuttleworth (widow), Miss L. H. Shuttleworth (daughter), Mr. Harry Shuttleworth (son), Mr. Harold W. Shuttleworth (son), and Mr. Ernest Shuttleworth (son). In the second coach were Mr. and Mrs. John Cottam (daughter and son-in-law), Master John Cottam (grandson), Mr. Samuel Shuttleworth (brother), Mr. and Mrs Clave (sister and brother-in-law), Mr. and Mrs Kay Clegg (sister and brother-in-law). In the third coach were Mr. and Mrs. Jos. Kay (sister and brother-in-law), Mr. and Mrs. Cheetham (sister and brother-in-law), Mr. Charles Taylor (brother-in-law), and Mrs. George Andrews (cousin). In the fourth coach were Mrs. Hough (Bolton), Mrs. Morrison (nurse), Mr. John Redford (Swinton), Mr. Solomon Clark (representing Colonel Clark and family), and Mr. John Jackson (Oldham). In the fifth coach were Mr. Henshaw (Wigan), Mr. Domenic Fisconia (Leigh), Mrs Harrison (Oldham); and in the sixth coach was the Rev. James Lees, of Salford.

The funeral service throughout was conducted by the Rev. James Lees. The service was of a most impressive character, and was witnessed by considerable numbers of friends and neighbours of the deceased, and on the way from the home of the family to the cemetery the solemn cortége evoked a great amount of public sympathy.

The bearers were Messrs. Samuel and Herbert Mellor (Messrs. R. H. Mellor and Son, Oldham) and W. H. and J. W. Price (Oldham). The funeral arrangements were in the capable hands of Mr. George Barlow, of Oldham.

To Mrs. Shuttleworth and family and to their numerous circle of relatives and friends, we tender our sincere sympathy, quite sure that we are only expressing the conviction of every showman of fairground caterer to whom William Shuttleworth was known either personally or by well-won repute. Mrs. Shuttleworth desires us through the medium of "The Showman World" to thank their numerous friends for their most sympathetic telegrams and letters of condolence.

Amongst the many floral tributes sent were the following: Harp, with broken cord, by Mrs. Shuttleworth (widow), and wreaths by sons and daughters, brothers, and sisters, Mr. and Mrs. John Cottam, Colonel Clark and family, Mr. and Mrs. W. Mitchell, jun., Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Mitchell, Mr. and Mrs. S. Appleton, Mr. and Mrs. D Fisconia, Mrs. Henshaw and family, Mr. and Mrs. J. Hough, Messrs. R. H. Mellor and Sons, and the Rev. James and Mrs. Lees, Salford.

THE FIGHT FOR MITCHAM FAIR.

ANOTHER PROPOSAL TO ABOLISH IT DEFEATED.

Following the startling revelations concerning the purchase of the Fair rights at the last meeting of the Board of Conservators, we have now an important discussion at the Parish Council on the same subject.

The matter is exciting the deepest interest in Mitcham, and every day is making it more evident that the action of the organised showmen in defending the Fair was the right thing. The agitation that led up to the people of Mitcham demanding to know why their Ancient Fair Rights were to be taken from them has led to the present searching enquiries into all the circumstances attending the scheme to abolish the Fair.

We are indebted to the Mitcham Herald for the report we now give of the discussion at the Parish Council.

At the monthly meeting of the Mitcham Parish Council, in the Vestry Hall, on Tuesday evening, Mr. C. H. Dant presided, and there were also present Messrs. W. M. Bland, T. Taylor, J. R. Chart, W. H. Parslow, G. J. Dale, J. D. Drewett, J. M. Leather, T. W. Aldwinckle, A. Dandy, A. Mizen, F. L. Baker, P. F. Kensett, and Dr. de Caux.

The Fair Green.

Mr. Aldwinckle moved the following:—(1) That this Council request the Board of Conservators of Mitcham Common to at once undertake the improvement of the Upper Green on the general lines of the proposed scheme and particulars submitted to the Commons Committee to provide a permanent recreation ground for the people (said scheme to include, if possible, the requisite widening of the surrounding roads), with a view to giving work to the Mitcham unemployed.

(2) That in the event of this Council receiving such an undertaking from the Board of Conservators, a sum of money equal to half the cost of such scheme (not exceeding the sum of £200), towards the general expenses of the Conservators, be contributed by the Council.

(3) That, as this proposed improvement of the upper Green into a recreation ground will be of such a nature that no "Fair" can be held thereon in future, a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to the Secretary of State for home affairs, together with an epitome of the facts which led up to, included, and followed the purchase of the Fair Rights.

That scheme, he said, was brought before the Commons Committee privately last June. That being before the Fair it was thought fit to take everything in private and to exclude the Press. At the time he thought that was the correct thing to do. (Mr. Bland: Shame.) But since then he had thought that he had made a great mistake. The scheme he was proposing was to turn the present waste called the Upper Green into a permanent recreation ground for Mitcham. To do that it would be necessary to put posts and rails round the Green, then about 10ft. of shrubs or rockery, then tar paths, and then turf. The result would be that they would turn that Upper Green, which at present was an eyesore, into a thing of beauty and a joy to the people of Mitcham. At the same time they would have to consider the widening of the roads. Those roads that went round the Fair Green were on some sides narrow, and they would ask the Conservators to give up certain land to be taken over by the District Council. The work that the scheme involved would be to a great extent labour. It was necessary for him to touch upon that much discussed £400. There was no mystery about it and never would be one. That Council chose to vote £400 for the improvement of the Upper Green. The total cost of that improvement would be £1,250. £950 went to the buying of the Fair rights, and another £300 would go in the scheme that he was proposing to them that night. Having voted that, was it not logical to go on with the scheme and carry out what he was proposing? He did not object to the Fair as a fair, but he objected to its being held on the Upper Green, necessitating an arid waste and an absolute eyesore, the first thing they saw when they came into Mitcham.

Mr. Drewett seconded, and said the Fair Green was too limited in area now for the holding of a fair.

Mr. Baker moved that "Though willing to do any work in reason for the employment of the unemployed, this Council absolutely refuses to vote any money to the Conservators which may tend to deprive the inhabitants of their right to hold the Charter Fair." If the Mitcham Fair Green were surrounded by posts, those posts would come down as soon as they were put up. That was only part of a scheme, and Mr. Aldwinckle—although, he (Mr. Baker) was willing to admit, unconsciously—was playing the game of the Conservators.

Mr. Leather asked if they could vote any money towards the purchase of the franchise of a fair.

The Clerk: No, you cannot.

Mr. Bland asked if Mr. Aldwinckle did not misrepresent the whole affair.

The Clerk said the money was voted to the Conservators in view of their obtaining the franchise.

Mr. Bland seconded the amendment.

Dr. de Caux said it had not been proved that Mitcham had any right to buy a franchise. It seemed to him that, under the glamour of finding work for the unemployed, Mr. Aldwinckle had rather taken advantage of that council. There was no necessity for the present Upper Green to look so barren as it did. Would it not be possible to rail it round and make it a children's recreation ground without turfing it? He would like to modify Mr. Baker's resolution and move that a certain amount of money be spent upon the Upper Green in making it presentable in the form of a children's playground.

Mr. Leather said he would vote against Mr. Aldwinckle until such time as the fair had been done away with by the Home Secretary. Money spent on the Fair Green would be absolutely wasted.

In answer to questions Mr. Mizen said the £400 was spent in one sum and there was no balance of £100. On Dec. 5, 1905 (he was speaking from memory), that Board made a grant of £400 to the Conservators. It was paid into their account on Dec. 13, and on Dec. 28 it was drawn out of the account of the late Mr. Alderman Foss towards the purchase of the Fair rights.

Dr. de Caux said that if that was granted with a view to the purchase of the Fair rights they were committing an illegal act.

The Chairman said he would support the amendment, and in the course of his remarks said he agreed with those members who said the Fair would take place annually, and he found himself entirely in disagreement with those who said that the Fair Green was not the right place for the fair. The motion had been brought forward as a subterfuge to get rid of the fair under the guise of helping the unemployed. He agreed with Mr. Mallaby Deeley when he said that the Council had been unable to get satisfaction from its own representatives on the Board of Conservators.

Mr. Dale and Mr. Chart also made a few remarks and stated it as their firm conviction that they voted their money for the improveemnt of the Upper Green, not for the purchase of the Fair rights.

The amendment was carried by five votes to three.

Another Development.

That the people of Mitcham are not without remedy in the matter, and what is of equal importance, leadership, is seen from the fact that a Parish Meeting has been duly summoned.

The following is the text of the bill calling the people together in local parliament (that is the theory underlying local governing), to put right the things that some of their representatives have blundered about:—

PARISH OF MITCHAM.

Notice is hereby given that a Parish Meeting will be held at the Vestry Hall, on Friday, the 13th day of November, 1908, at eight o'clock in the evening precisely, for the transaction of the following business:—

(1) Mr. F. L. Baker to call attention to the question of the unemployed in Mitcham, and to move a resolution.

(2) Mr. W. M. Bland to call attention to the following resolution passed by the Mitcham Parish Council on Oct. 13, 1905:

"That the sum of four hundred pounds (£400) be contributed by the Council towards the expenses of the Mitcham Common Conservators, in view of that body acquiring the rights of the Fair held annually on the Upper Mitcham Green, the acquirement of such rights enabling the Conservators to improve the aspect of such Green."

and to move:

"That the President of the Local Government Board be earnestly requested to hold an enquiry into the legality of the Council's action in thus voting £400 of the ratepayers' money and into the circumstances surrounding the whole transaction."

(Signed) C. H. Dant,
Chairman of the Parish Council.

Dated this 6th day of November, 1908.

SHOWMAN'S MARRIAGE.

Mr. William Henry Toft, eldest son of the late Mr. William Toft, one of the largest pioneers of the showmen of Ireland, celebrated his coming of age when, on Nov. 4, at St. Peter's Church, Dublin, a large party of relations and friends were present to witness the interesting ceremony of his marriage to Miss Elizabeth Mary (Cissie) Ashley, only daughter of Mr. Herbert and Nellie Ashley, both of whom are well known in the theatrical world. The bride was given away by her brother, Mr. William Ashley, and Mr. George W. Sutton acted as best man.

Mr. Harry Toft, as he is best known to all, has been managing the business in Dublin in conjunction with his uncles, Mr. David Turnbull (of Belfast) and Mr. John Toft (of Galway), who are also the trustees of the estate.

The presents were costly and numerous, and included from bridegroom to bride gold curbed bracelet, with diamonds; bride to bridegroom diamond and turquoise pin; and the bridesmaids were presented with watch bracelets. A reception was held at Beechwood-avenue, Ranelagh, Co. Dublin, where the toast of the health and prosperity of the bride and bridegroom was most heartily enjoyed, amongst those attending being Mrs. Ashley, Mr. William Ashley, Miss C. D'Arcy, Misses May and Agnes Toft (bridesmaids), Mr. and Mrs. and Miss John Toft, Mr. John H. Toft, Mr. and Mrs. David Turnbull and Miss Turnbull, Mr. P. L. Browarigg (solicitor), Mr. David Toft, Mr. James Toft, Mr. Thomas Toft, Brothers Silvester, Mr. Harry Lee, Misses Dewhurst (three), Mrs. Smith, the Misses Brannigan (three), Mrs. Feely, Miss Ethel D'Arcy, Miss K. Sutton, Miss O'Toole, Mr. Joseph Power, Mr. Robert Balbirnie, and Mr. Charles G. Freear.

Messrs. Wm. Haggar and Son have paid a successful visit at Mountain Ash. They have a delightful series of pictures, under the direction of Mr. Walter Haggar. Mr. Felix Testo, at Ammanford, drew good houses. His clever marionette performance is well worthy of a visit. Messrs. Brewers' Bioscope had a few days at Bridgend. Many new pictures are on the programme.

Messrs. Bostock's Jungle at Mountain Ash draws good crowds daily.

Brecon Fair was held in delightful weather, and attracted record crowds, and our showmen friends did good business.

Although the ancient fair has been threatened to be curtailed, by inquiries I made in the town the majority are in favour of it being kept on as usual.

Among the many attractions, Messrs. Dooner and Son had a good programme for their many patrons. The pictures, as usual, under the direction of an old Brecon favourite, "Gus," were ably depicted. The Misses Dooner go through a graceful set of dances on the front. Messrs. Wadbrooke had all up to date pictures and varieties, under the guidance of Mr. Jeffries and Mr. Glover, who both work hard to ensure success. A smart musical turn is a young lad, Joseph Rock. The Leon Troupe of male and female acrobats go through a capital performance.

In the machine list are Mr. John Studt's beautiful motors and Marshall Evans's racers. The Hoopla game has caught on, and was catered for by the following:—Prince Samouda, Gage E. Clarke, Marshall Evans, T. Butlin, J. Davies. Cokernuts, swings, Mollies, &c., by Marshall Evans, T. Butlin, Chas. Gage, E. Clarke. Photos by Turner. Our old friend Mr. Punch was capably represented by Mr. H. Hayes.

FILM GOSSIP.

Showmen and Managers throughout the United Kingdom, and in every English-speaking country, will find in this column particulars of some of the best and newest Films in the Market. Many of these Films we have seen ourselves, and can confidently recommend showmen to add them to their list of attractions.

Charles Urban Trading Co., Ltd.

CHRISTMAS FROM THE BIRTH OF CHRIST TO THE 20TH CENTURY.—We take pleasure in giving a few further particulars concerning this beautiful coloured film. The first scene opens with a picture depicting the angels announcing the birth of Christ. Gracefully grouped and artistically coloured, the figures ascend amid falling snowflakes with charming effect. Then we come to Bethlehem's manger and its Divine occupant, a realistic scene introducing Mary, the infant Jesus, and Joseph; the shepherds, to whom the angelic announcement was made, arrive and prostrate themselves; and the wise men from the East presenting offerings of gold, frankincense, and myrrh to Jesus and His mother. Scenes representative of the early Christian era open with a charming river view, the banks overhung with graceful trees. On the right are priests awaiting a party of warriors, to conduct them to a grove where an altar has been prepared for worship. The following scene depicts the landing of the early Christians, who march in procession to the grove. As the devout people are worshipping, the rude altar is mysteriously dissolved into a vision scene of the manger at Bethlehem and the Holy Family. The vision remains for a few seconds, then becomes fainter, and vanishes, the altar remaining as before.

A FURTHER portion of the film shows Fra Angelico, the artist-monk, seated on a platform, ready to paint a fresco of the Holy Family at Bethlehem. He is overpowered by sleep. Angels appear, and with the tools of his craft rapidly paint the picture. Angelico awakes, and, astounded to find the work complete, falls down in worship. The apparition of St. Joseph, a Flemish legend, comes next in order. Villagers arrive at the gates of a mansion to celebrate the festival. According to custom the lord of the manor escorts a lady who bears in her arms a cradle in which reposes an image of the Child Jesus. The villagers present their offerings and do reverence. Suddenly from the outskirts appears an aged man, who approaches and takes the image in his arms. The Child comes to life and is carried away by the traveller, in whom the worshippers recognise Joseph, the husband of Mary. This scene represents the flight into Egypt to escape the massacre of the innocents commanded by King Herod.

AFTER treating the spectator to the highwaymen's legend, the picture proceeds to describe an Alsatian Christmas celebration, with worshippers on their way to midnight Mass through picturesque snow-covered streets. In the interior of the church the priest celebrates Mass in front of an altar enriched with golden vessels. The congregation worships, and the choir sings from the organ-loft set high in the sacred edifice. This is a beautiful and realistic scene, which reproduces every phase and feature of the service. Christmas in the seventeenth century (France) commences with a view of the exterior of a country mansion—a winter scene; long, graceful flight of steps, lit by torches, at the foot of which the host welcomes his guests. The interior shows the Christmas party assembled, attired in exquisite costumes, delightfully coloured. Santa Claus arrives in the decorated hall, and his burden consists of two dancers, who lead the festivities. The dance over, the guests witness a vision of the Infant Jesus, which occupies the centre of the room, while the spectators, filled with reverence, prostrate themselves. Passing over three hundred years, we witness a Christmas festival in the France of to-day.

A PLEASING and romantic picture is that depicting an old-fashioned English Christmas. The scenes include the decorating of a baronial hall, with its armour-bearing oak walls, the bringing in of the Yule log—a striking scene, most effectively reproduced in colours, the Christmas dinner, the plum-pudding, the lighting of the brandy, the servants' Christmas, festivities in the hall, the dancing, &c. The film concludes with a scene of a belfry, and the ringer blessing the bells before giving the Christmas peal.

Pathé Frères.

BENVENUTO CELLINI.—This film puts before our eyes a curious episode of the life so full of adventures of Benvenuto Cellini. One day Cellini receives at his studio the following letter:—"A great lady of the Court wishes to sit to you, but on the strict understanding that you never seek to discover who she is." The artist greets with surprise the unexpected model, whose features are masked, and carves out from same the graceful statue known as the "Nymph of Fontainebleau." Yet, in spite of the entreaties of Cellini, who is curious to know who his nymph is, the lady refuses to make herself known. Cellini and his pupil, Ascanio dei Gaddi, decide to unravel the mystery. They follow the lady, and kidnap her at night. She keeps silent, and defends herself with a fierce courage. Prayers, threats, entreaties are all in vain. King Francis I. comes to the studio, and, after admiring the artist's work, he expresses his desire to know the model who sat for the nymph, and the artist introduces him to the masked lady. It is the Duchess of Etampes, the King's favourite. In his wrath, the King banishes Cellini from France.

HEAD-DRESSES IN BRITTANY has quite an educational aspect. The titles of the different scenes are:—Ironing a Pont-Aven Collar, One Tuck per Plait of Straw, A Maiden's Head-dress, A Bride's Head-dress, A Widow's Head-dress, and Various Head-dresses.

IN LAPLAND.—Here we are introduced to some interesting open-air scenes—The Shepherd's Camp, Food Storage Reserves, Reindeer in Pasture, Branding the Young Reindeer, and Lassoing the Reindeer for Domestic Purposes.

A TROUBLED SOUL.—In this film clever trick scenes are brought to our notice. A Scottish gentleman goes to sleep after drinking a good portion of a bottle of whisky. His soul, leaving his body, goes to a land of light. St. Peter, whom he recognises by the keys he is carrying, puts him several questions and then sends him off to a place where drunkards generally go. The poor gentleman sinks into the ethereal regions, and back to the clouds and earth again. A curious thing is that, although he has taken back his usual form again, he sees tram-cars, carriages, passers-by, go through his earthly body without doing him any harm. Yet, Satan, appearing to him, wraps him in his fire cloak, and the poor man tumbles down into an abyss. Then he wakes up, and realising that the whisky is the cause of all this nightmare, promises never to drink a drop of it again—till the next time.

SWEET DREAMS INTERMINGLED WITH NIGHTMARES.—This is another "trick" series. Near a lake, amidst picturesque surroundings, a young Princess falls asleep on a stone bench. She dreams, and the spirits of the lake come forth from the depths of the water and take her away with them to their grottoes, where dwarfs and goblins mean to burn her alive. At this moment the Princess wakes up, to fall asleep again a little while later. This time it is the Water Fairy who comes and pays her a visit. She walks in a park full of fragrant flowers, and a Prince Charming whispers in her ears sweet things. But dreams vanish, and instead of the young Prince Charming it is a very old Marquis who comes and pays her his respects, as she leaves Dreamland and wakens to our world again.

A DISCIPLE OF VIDOCQ.—A canary has been stolen from its cage while its mistress was asleep, by an unknown person. On waking up she misses her bird, and, in spite of her grief, she nerves herself for the ordeal of gathering the first clues. She finds a few yellow feathers, scattered about, and this makes her think that there has been not only theft, but actual crime. She calls upon the famous detective Frick Barker second to none except the best, and puts the case before him. Mr. Barker, after closely examining the little tufts of yellow down, declares that they are actually canary's feathers, and, this first point understood, he goes with his magnifying-glass to the place where the crime has been perpetrated. A careful examination and a few feathers lead him to the dwelling of the culprit. Without a moment's hesitation he climbs on to the roof, goes down the chimney-flue, and arrests the culprit, who has just eaten the bird. Mr. Frick Barker has not finished yet. With the aid of a large knife he extracts the live bird from the culprit, and gives it back to its delighted mistress.

LEW DOCKSTADER IN MINSTREL MISHAPS; OR, LATE FOR REHEARSAL.—Dockstader is billed to appear in a certain town, but, missing his train, he is obliged to have a special. To make things run smooth he uses a lot of "palm oil," yet in spite of all his tips he has no time to spare, so he takes a cab. The steed, however, would sooner sleep than work, but by using some persuasion he goes off at a mad gallop, with the result that one of the wheels strikes, and our minstrel is forced to get on the run himself. He manages to reach the theatre as the show is about to commence, so he disrobes on his way, dresses, and makes up at the same time. Rushing on the stage, the red-haired manager refuses to let the minstrel go on, and, after a wordy warfare, the manager, with the assistance of the other actors, chases him all over the stage. Rushing out of the stage-door, many funny incidents occur whilst he is being chased "up hill and down dale." Getting tired of this hare-and-hounds business, our minstrel spies a big drain-pipe, into which he dashes, and is quickly followed by the crowd. Dockstader gets out first, and, slipping on one side, sees the mad manager and the yelling crowd go headlong into the water. This cools their ardour, and, having become wiser, Dockstader wins, and "all's well that ends well."

A FOOL FOR LUCK.—Having read an advertisement with regard to a detective correspondence school, Hiram Plowboy decides to become a detective, and enrols as a student. Studying very hard, he soon passes his examination, and they send him his diploma, badge, handcuffs, and a revolver. Having got so far, he decides to start work, and betakes himself into the city. Surrounding himself with an air of mystery, he impresses everyone by the display of his badge. So that there shall not be any chance of failure at a critical moment, he takes a dummy from his baggage, and practises the art of handcuffing. He next tries some revolver practice, with the result that the occupant of the next room objects, and has Plowboy arrested. The treatment he receives at the hands of his fellow professionals does not impress him, and, having to pay damages, he decides to alter his methods and copy that celebrated master in the detective art Sherlock Holmes. Perusing the newspaper, he sees a reward offered for the capture of a notorious criminal, and rushes off to secure the reward. Calling at the detective agency, he is given three photographs—different views of the same man—but, Hiram thinking that they are three different criminals, swelling with pride, starts out on his hunt. After many experiences and strenuous efforts, he captures three men, and, taking voluminous notes and many measurements, he pays officers to lock them up. Making a dash for the detective offices to claim his reward, he has a warm time with the manager, who tells him someone else has captured the real criminal. Poor Plowboy is very sad, and is just trying to get out of the way as easily as possible, when he gets a big surprise. A police officer rushes in with a note from police headquarters, complimenting him on the capture of three well-known criminals, all long wanted, and offers Hiram position as detective sergeant. Needless to say our hero accepts, and thus realises his life's dream.

THE STEPMOTHER.—Sir John is kneeling by his wife's death-bed with his children. The good woman blesses her dear ones, and falls back dead on the pillow. A year later the young and light-hearted Sir John marries Lady Helen, who is not quite young, but still beautiful. She and her daughter ill-treat the poor little children by the first marriage. The two little ones are shut up in a dark tower-room, and the grown-up daughter soon after has to join them, as the stepmother is afraid that, with such exquisite beauty, she would draw away a young nobleman's attention from her own daughter. During the dancing in the hall the child puts her little brothers to sleep on the straw bed; then she falls off to sleep herself. In her dreams she sees the spirit of her mother blessing the little children, and pointing with her white hand threateningly towards the hall. In the end the schemes of the wicked stepmother are upset, and the children by the first wife are made extremely happy.

KASAN.—Kasan is a town in the northern part of Russia. It is situated by the River Wolga, and has about 200,000 inhabitants. This film gives an excellent idea of this old town, with the marked old-Russian varieties of people, the special life in the streets, the peculiar national customs, which are strongly impressed by the religious character of the people. Very characteristic is the regular migration to the churchyard on Sundays and the multitude of beggars, who do a thriving business outside the church, while they are constantly making the sign of the cross. It is amusing to see the hairdresser, who is working on the pavement, the bootmaker also working in the open air, and the tramps, who are lying about carelessly in rags on the doorsteps with the inevitable bottles.

Inkerman Day at Curzon Hall, Birmingham.

In celebration of the anniversary of Inkerman Day a benefit performance of animated pictures and variety acts was given on Nov. 5 by Mr. Waller Jeffs and a company of entertainers in aid of the funds of the Birmingham Military Veterans' Association. A number of interesting and suitable films were submitted, and during the evening a tableau of the Birmingham veterans was arranged. The musical and vocal portion of the programme was in keeping with the occasion, and Sergeant-Major Dawes, wearing the full uniform of the period, recited "Inkerman." A contingent of the Nottingham military veterans was present, including Sergeant-Major Watson and Trooper Matthew Holland, who is the sole Nottingham survivor of the charge of the Light Brigade at Balaclava. These veterans were accompanied by Mr. H. Seely Whitby, hon. secretary of the Nottingham and Notts Military Veterans' Association, and Mr. Pochin, of Nottingham. During the evening the curtain was raised, disclosing a well-arranged group of the Birmingham veterans in their full uniform, decorated with a background of national flags. In the centre of the stage was Councillor R. C. Marsh, who occupied the chairman's seat, and made a speech on the subject of the good work done in Birmingham by the Military Veterans' Association, particularly thanking the audience for the hearty support they had always given to these entertainments for this good cause. Mr. Marsh voiced the regret of everyone present at the unavoidable absence, through ill-health, of the secretary, the Rev. W. J. Clarke, who has always been a familiar figure at these gatherings and to whom so much of the success of the association is due. Mr. Seely Whitby, the secretary, responded, and expressed the pleasure of himself and his comrades at being present. Mr. Whitby then introduced Mr. Pochin, a member of the committee of the Nottingham veterans and a well-known philanthropist in Nottingham, who presented on behalf of the Nottingham military veterans a gold medal to Mr. Jeffs in remembrance of his efforts on behalf of the men in that part of the country. The flags and decorations were kindly lent by Mr. George Legg, and the stage arrangements were directed by Mr. Fred Jeffrey, general manager for Mr. Jeffs.

MINSTREL MISHAPS, or Late for Rehearsals.

Seated in a comfortable seat, watching the antics of "Bones," laughing at the corner-man's jokes, one rarely realises that there may be scenes and incidents back of the footlights that surpass any seen from the front. This subject is an unusual one, and for that reason should prove a top-liner. The principal character is Lew Dockstader—the famous American Ebony King—and the film tells a mirth-provoking story of the mishaps that befell him whilst trying to reach the theatre in time for rehearsal.

ABRIDGMENTS OF SPECIFICATIONS.

14,056.—Kinematographs. Wrench, A., of London.

In kinematographs in which the intermittent motion of a film is obtained by a Maltese cross actuated by a crank-pin, the cross and crank driving device are immersed in an oil-bath, so as to obviate the tendency to jam caused by expansion due to the heat generated by friction between them. The drawing shows a sectional plan of the device. The portion h of the oil casing g is formed by an extension of the bracket c, in which the spindle of the feed-sprockets a is mounted. The other portion i of the casing is integral with the bracket j, in which the spindle f driving the crank-pin e, and hence the Maltese cross d and feed-sprockets a, is mounted.

In moving-picture travelling illusion apparatus the rolling and pitching movements of a ship at sea are produced by two pairs of links b pivoted under the deck or platform a, and to two transverse horizontal links (c), which are mounted on rollers b3, on rails h, and are moved to and fro by crank discs d and connecting-rods b2 operated by a motor or other driving mechanism. Guide-pins a2 at the ends of the platform move in vertical slots i1 in end guide-plates i.

Intermittent motion is imparted to the film by mechanism actuated by a double cam which is driven through an epicyclic train of wheels. The drawing shows a side elevation of the device. The cam b is driven by the horizontal shaft a through bevel wheels c and an epicyclic train d, e, f. Of this train the wheel f is fixed to the body of the machine, and is provided with teeth on its inner circumference; and the wheels d are carried by an arm g fixed to the shaft h. The cam is provided with two grooves in which work rollers j, k, one roller (j) being attached to a plate l, and the other to a plate m, both of which work in guides n. The plate l carries a pinion o, which engages teeth in the plate m, and also a rack p, which carries a plate q on which are pins r for engaging the perforations of the film. The grooves on the cam are not parallel throughout their length, but are so shaped that the plates l, m, move together until the roller j reaches its highest point. This roller then remains stationary for a time; as the other roller continues to ascend, the pinion o is caused to revolve, and the pins r engage the film. The rollers then descend together and the film is drawn down; when the downward motion of the roller j ceases, however, the roller k continues to descend, and thus the pins r are withdrawn. The rollers are then in a position to commence another cycle. The cam may be mounted on a horizontal axis and the grooves cut on its face, or two separate cams may be used. Any form of gearing may be used for driving the cam.

Natural Colours in Cinematograms.—Particulars are to hand of the recent invention of M. Barricelli, an Italian painter, by which he reproduces cinematographic scenes in their natural colours. The colouration of the films is obtained by means of the three-colour process. A rapid succession of images gives the inventor the desired result, each of which is coloured in one of the three fundamental colours (red, yellow, blue) which, being projected one after the other on the screen, will, in virtue of the well-known phenomenon of visual persistence, reconstitute on the retina of the eye the complete three-colour image. In order, then, to reproduce a given scene with its natural colours it is sufficient to photograph the object three times through conveniently coloured screens, each of which will allow only the light-rays of a given colouration to pass, thus obtaining three analytical colour negatives. The corresponding positives derived from these negatives in black and white will have to be projected in rapid succession on a white wall, each through the same colour screen as has been used in obtaining the negative, when the eye will perceive a multi-coloured image corresponding to nature, provided the rate of succession be such that the individual impressions due to the various colours on the retina may superimpose themselves on one another. Thus the length of the photographic film, together with the speed of succession, should be three times as great as in an ordinary cinematograph. M. Barricelli's system for insuring the succession of the various colour screens in front of the objective while taking the views and during projection is said to be of extreme simplicity. He rotates a glass disc divided into three coloured sectors, according to the fundamental colours, red, yellow, blue, in front of the objective, so as to exchange the screen at each movement of the cinematograph shutter.

COUNTY THEATRE, KINGSTON.

The Royal County Theatre, which for about eleven years has been the home of comedy, drama, and musical plays, was on Monday night turned into a music hall, Mr. Peter Davey, the enterprising managing-director, having decided to depart from the usual order of things, and to cater for the wants of a large section of the patrons of the theatre. A first-class programme of varieties was provided, and it was undoubtedly highly appreciated by the audience, but old habitués of the cosy little playhouse could not help a feeling of regret at the change.

The bulk of the programme consisted of first-class music hall turns. Miss Violet Beatrice, the clever boy impersonator, was first on the list of artists, and made a favourable impression. Mr. Ted Honeyman next gave some clever imitations of popular performers, and the Sisters Herbert, who followed, were loudly applauded in their juvenile duets and dances. Ford and Hanson, "the American musical millionaires," showed great cleverness on many novel musical instruments and in delineation of some famous composers and chefs d'orchestre. Miss Providence Leslie sang some Irish songs very sweetly, and Mr. Walter Bellonini, the well-known juggler, excited general admiration for the remarkable dexterity he showed in his art. In the second part Mr. Frank Gee, the comedian, caused no end of amusement by his quaint drolleries. A series of pictures by the Graphic Cinematograph Company was also much enjoyed, and the programme closed with a performance of Micawber, an adaptation of Charles Dickens's "David Copperfield," in which Miss Joan Derry appeared as David Copperfield, Mr. J. A. Howitt as Uriah Heep, Mr. Frederick Jacques as Mr. Wickfield, Miss Lena Denton as Agnes, Miss Scott Lauder as Betsy Trotwood, and Mr. Charles Collette as Wilkins Micawber. The latter performance, approaching, as it did, to the old order of things, was very much enjoyed by many of those present. The theatre will be conducted as a music hall on the two-houses-a-night principle for several weeks yet, after which there will be a return to drama.

PUTNEY HIPPODROME.

Visitors to the Putney Hippodrome on Monday night just prior to the second show must have been struck with the long lines of people patiently waiting the opening of the doors, and on getting inside saw that a large proportion of the house was already either reserved or occupied by early door and box office patrons. A briskly played overture started the ball rolling, and seemed to put the attendant Putneyites in a merry mood. This was followed by a prepossessing young comedienne, Miss Nora Guy, who sang of the "Congo River," her voice being tuneful and sweet. Conan and Doyle succeeded with a patter song and some amusing dialogue, finishing up a creditable turn by a neat exhibition of dancing. The Sisters Pine were seen to advantage in a golfing song and sketch, one of the pair acting as a capital foil to the other. The Selbini troupe of cyclists won rounds of applause by a clever combination of riding, balancing, and ground tumbling, each and every trick being performed without the slightest hitch or slip.

Miss Dorothy Gould, a lady possessing a soprano voice of remarkable range, gave a couple of songs at the piano, and concluded with "Love me and the world is mine," bringing down the house. Ruffell's Bioscope presented a series of pictures illustrative of two juveniles who were stolen by a band of gipsies and afterwards made their escape and returned to their home, having many exciting adventures during the journey. Mr. John Grahame and Miss Zerlina Harrington scored in their popular Parisian sketch A Daughter of Pleasure. The trifle was well dressed and smartly played. Mr. Will Musgrave and Martin Conway created considerable amusement. The latter has a decidedly comical make-up and speaks his lines in a broad Lancashire dialect. Miss Topsy Sinden was responsible for a refined turn, which included a couple of songs and an exceedingly pretty dance. She received a well-merited recall, and repeated her dance, to the evident delight of the house. Wilman, who styles himself the Australian Instrumentalist, gave solos on the posthorn, cornet, and French horn, his double-tonguing in the cornet solo being very clever. The celebrated Harry Tate was expected to give his well-known piscatorial skit Fishing. Mr. Foster C. Marner, the manager, however, appeared before the footlights and apologised for Mr. Tate's absence, explaining that it was owing to a motor accident.

MASONS AT WORK.

The pressing emergencies of his public avocations preclude the possibility of an actor, or manager, being able to be always at his post when his Masonic duties call for his presence in the Lodge, and in few places is it more noticeable than at the meetings of the Green Room Lodge; but, thanks to the zeal and assiduity displayed by many of the lay members and the fact that there is a goodly roll of Past Masters to call upon in cases of emergency, the brethren in no appreciable way suffer in consequence, and although it was regrettable that the reigning Master, Mr. E. H. Bull, was unable to be present at the twenty-eighth meeting, which was held last Friday at the Imperial Restaurant, Regent-street, it is pleasurable to record that his place was most admirably filled by Mr. Akerman May, the immediate Past Master, who was supported in a thoroughly efficient manner by the officers as follows: Messrs. Douglas Gordon, acting as S.W.; Hubert Willis, J.W.; Chas. Cruikshanks, Secretary; Ernest H. Paterson, acting as S.D.; Edward Jones, acting as J.D.; W. Lestocq, D.C.; Albert E. Raynor, acting as Organist; and J. Cooke Beresford acting as I.G.

Messrs. Lauri de Frece and John Cabourn had the advantage of receiving the final privileges of their novitiation; and Mr. Henry Ainley having proved in the most convincing manner his proficiency was advanced a stage in his Masonic career.

Messrs. Leslie Carter and Robert Loraine were nominated as candidates for election as members of the Lodge.

Apologies for non-attendance were received from Messrs. Fred Annerley, Alban Attwood, E. H. Bull, Louis Calvert, H. Nye Chart, Chas. Doran, Wilfred Draycott, Dermot Fitzgibbon, Richard Green, Lytton Grey, Chas. Macdona, Harry Nicholls, E. Vivian Reynolds, Charles Rock, Julian Royce, J. H. Ryley, Herbert Shelley, and Stephen Wentworth.

There were present in the Lodge throughout the proceedings, besides the members who acted as officers, Messrs. Walter Maxwell, Sydney Lawrence, Frank Harding, Daniel McCarthy, J. W. Macdonald, M. T. Toke, Spencer Trevor, Lyn Harding, and Luigi Lablache, and visitors, Messrs. L. Barlet, John Smith, Frank Foulsham, and Henry de Frece.

The meeting was an auspicious one, and one might almost be allowed to call it a "red-letter" day, for in the Lodge a motion was, upon the proposition of Mr. Chas. Cruikshanks, seconded by Mr. Hubert Willis, carried with enthusiasm, "That the hearty congratulations of the members be offered to Mr. Akerman May, P.M. of the Lodge, who has been elevated to the dignity and distinction of 'London Rank,' and, as an appreciation of the respect shown to our worthy and esteemed brother, a record of the circumstance be entered on the minutes"; and at the banquet which followed the proceedings in the Lodge, Mr. W. Lestocq, the first Past Master, on behalf of the members, presented Mr. May with the insignia of the office, accompanying the gift with the heartiest expressions of goodwill and kindly feeling. Mr. May acknowledged the tribute paid to him, and in a felicitous manner thanked the brethren for the handsome token of their esteem, not only because it was a mark of distinction, but on account of its being the outward and visible sign of the honour conferred upon the Lodge by the selection of one of its Past Masters as a recipient of the dignity.

The toasts, "The King" and the "Master in the Chair," were the only ones put before the brethren, and consequently after-dinner speeches were conspicuous by their absence, nor were there any vocal or instrumental selections to while away the hour, and yet the omission of any post-prandial entertainment did not weigh heavily upon the light hearts gathered together to enjoy the pleasure of each other's society. Messrs. Gerald Maxwell, E. Vivian Reynolds, Alien Thomas, Ernest Cameron, Thalberg Corbet, and A. E. George were amongst the company dining.

The Master, Mr. E. H. Bull, sent the following telegram:—"Affectionate greeting to the acting-Master and brethren; exceedingly sorry that I cannot be with them."

CAMBERWELL PALACE.

The novelties at the Camberwell Palace this week include the introduction to London of a song-scena in which Miss Zona Vevey renders a number of selections accompanied by Herr Max Erard, a conductor and composer. The act takes place amid a sylvan scene called My Lady's Bower, an elaborate setting representing a profusion of flowers and foliage, a grand piano being cunningly introduced into the scheme. Herr Erard has the distinction of being both author and composer of Miss Vevey's songs, and shines the more conspicuously in the latter department, the words being, as a rule, of a commonplace character. "Have you seen Wee Macgregor?" in which a Scotch bagpipe player renders assistance, is followed by a song in which a farmer's boy sings the praises of his sweetheart. The ballad is tunefully written, and a grandly harmonious effect is secured by the introduction of a church bell obbligato, which secured an enthusiastic encore. Herr Erard is a skilful pianist, and gave great pleasure by his playing of one of his marches as a solo. Miss Vevey wears some effective costumes and sings with brightness and vivacity. A vocal scena, in which a lady shines, is also that of the monologue In Andalusia, rendered by Miss Sylvia Du Barry, who has a cultivated soprano, and is heard in a Spanish love ballad, which gives way to the Habañera song from Carmen, the second verse being accompanied by a bull-fight scene depicted on the cinematograph.

A welcome of the most cordial kind is extended to Mr. Tom Woottwell, who has found his low comedy talents to have eclipsed the effect even of his loose-legged whimsicalities. His new songs include one of a particularly funny character called, "What did I do?" delivered in the drollest possible manner. Mr. Woottwell is also happily suited in his lyric with the refrain "Keep it as quiet as you can," to which he is compelled by the enthusiasm of his hearers to add many additional verses. Miss Sadie Simpson is heard in "Ayesha, my sweet Egyptian" and in "When a girl that you want, wants you," and pleases by her style, her neat costume, and the distinctness of her singing. She is also an expert dancer, and the long and intricate series of steps which she adds to her latter selection gains admiration from keen judges of the art.

The picturesque singing of coon songs adopted by Miss Ella Shields renders them always acceptable, and the comely comedienne is welcomed with heartiness. The popularity of her well-known song "Do you want any coal?" is being emphasised by loud applause and a praiseworthy effort on the part of the audience to join in the captivating chorus. The pathos and sentiment of the sketch, The Little Colonel, played by Ernest Montefiore and company, never fail in their appeal, Mr. Ernest Rees adds piquant patter to his songs; Billy Farrell, who is billed as "the Encyclopædia of coonology," justifies his title by a varied entertainment in which singing, dancing, talking, and imitations play a diverting part; and the programme also comprises Miss Emma Don, character comedienne; Will Johnson, lively comedian; the Brothers Warsaw, Australian musical comedians; and Vernon's Bioscope. Mr. Philip A. Lennon still occupies the post of manager with every credit.

LONDON VARIETY THEATRES.

LONDON PAVILION.

Burlesque though somewhat out of the fashion as a theatrical attraction is never likely to lose its hold upon the public, and especially upon the present-day variety-loving public, which appreciates clever parody as much as audiences did in the old days of the Strand Theatre and the Brothers Brough, who furnished the male and spindle sides of the casts playing their pieces with lines, pointed in their satire, humorous, and yet without bitterness. In a minor degree these qualities are to be found in the skit now given nightly at the London Pavilion by Miss Ida Rene, who, using her gifts as a comedienne to great advantage, is burlesquing Miss Maud Allan's classic dancing at the Palace Theatre. Miss Rene is daintiness personified when she appears in the shortened diaphanous garments which belong by prescriptive stage management to the Greek nymph. The main idea of her "autumnal song," as she calls it, is to assert that the real raison d'être of classic dancing is the dress, or, rather, the undress. If you wish your dance to impress, you must really wear but little dress—is slily hinted, and the proceedings of the Manchester Watch Committee are also referred to in the verses, during which Miss Rene ambles about the stage and waves her arms in the manner that may be termed Allanesque, with just the touch of exaggeration necessary. The lines are smartly written, and in wedding them to the melody of Mendelssohn the author makes the satire as complete as it is captivating. No one could possibly raise an objection to so good humoured a travesty, which goes with unwavering swing and verve from first to last.

Mr. Harry Claff and Miss Alice Tremayne are associated in another burlesque production, bearing the title of The Demon and the Fairy, which is evidently an excerpt from pantomime, and of value in the exploitation of the talents of a clever pair. Chorus songs always have a certain vogue at the Pav., and a great success is scored with the tuneful number "Have you any more girls at home like Mary?" which is bound to be heard in most Christmas productions if we can gauge with any judgment the potent influences of a catchy melody and amusing verses. It is sung by Mr. Arthur Sutcliffe, a newcomer to the West-End, whose success is such that he is securing "returns" in more senses than one. Another Arthur—Mr. Aldridge, the Pavilion tenor—is also winning much favour with his patriotic song "Long live the King," which made a special appeal on Monday—the King's birthday—to the crowd of loyalists listening.

Laughter holding both its sides is the attitude of those in front while Mr. Harry Tate goes through the experiences of the josser fisherman who may be said to be angling for "contrapuntal" effects. He has an angry dispute with an enthusiastic devotee of the gentle craft, who has been disturbed by Harry's indiscriminate throwing of bread as "ground bait." "You're a liar" asserts the angry novice. "I'm not," is the reply. "Then you ought to be if you're a fisherman" is the rejoinder. But so amusing an episode needs no words of commendation on our part. Neither does the favourite sketch, My Wife Won't Let Me, presented by Mr. Mark Melford and company on a return visit. Another return is Mr. Albert Whelan, who is favoured with much applause in his mimicry and whistling. Mr. George Mozart is the stock comedian of the "Pav.," and a humorist who always gets there; but Little Tich is not so familiar a fun-maker on the boards of the house, the last time he appeared there being at a special matinée of the Rats. He is excellently served by his "Park-keeper" song, of which the drollery is an increasing quantity. Mr. Malcolm Scott as the Woman Who Knows is quite a sciolist in social ethics; Miss Ethel Walker's songs at the piano are highly appreciated; and the Marriotts give an interesting exhibition of their powers in mental telepathy. Miss Collins and Mr. Athas exploit some smart dancing and burlesque business; Vesta and Minnie Pine display hereditary ability in their item The Golf Girl and Caddie; and Mr. Maynard Dakin is making his way as a variety comedian. Mr. R. A. Speedwell's lightning cartoons are highly popular; the Glenroy Troupe of international dancers are responsible for some neat dancing and clever evolutions; and the society gymnastics of the Fitzroys are very smart and effective. Kartelli is a wonderful wire-walker; and other attractions in Mr. Glenister's fine bill include Mr. Larry Lewis, Brull and Hemsley, Mike Nono, and Elton and Edwin. On the selections and accompaniments great care is lavished by the excellent corps of instrumentalists under the able direction of Mr. Bond-Sayers.

SADLER'S WELLS.

Mr. Pete Murray, the acting-manager of Sadler's Wells Theatre, has an interesting list of artists this week. A very attractive act is that of Mack Ollive, who appears in his original scena, as performed by him over a thousand times in The Belle of New York, entitled The Candy Scene. In this Mr. Ollive is assisted by Miss Daisy Baldry, and the outcome of their combined efforts finds great favour with the audience. The Sisters Brenton are duettists and speciality dancers of considerable merit, and their chorus, "Master Fritz," goes very well indeed.

Miss Marion Armitage, "the comedy girl," delights the house with her rendering of "Too-raladdie," and the Melbournes present an extremely smart comedy musical act. Bernard and Weston exchange some most entertaining cross-patter, and their song, "Looking for work," proves highly acceptable; and Miss Connie Mostyn, a comedienne who has won immense favour at Sadler's Wells, sings in a most expressive manner her ditty, "You've got another girl." Leslie's Comedy Cadets, including Mr. George Curzon (baritone), Messrs. Vernon Noble and Jim Pullin (comedians), and Mr. Harry Leslie (ventriloquist), appear in their military scena, After Lights Out, which wins golden opinions from the spectators, the songs "Lindy" and "Baby on the sands" being given in fine style. Ferguson and Mack, who claim to be America's funniest eccentric comedians, are introducing this week their latest absurdity, "The Dimple Sisters," which really proves very laughable. In the second part of their programme they play the rôles of acrobatic ballet girls, and the "scena" is appropriately enough entitled "Pretty as a Picture." Altogether, Ferguson and Mack are capital merry-makers. Gold and Sterling, "the Welsh girl and the artist," also furnish a pleasing turn, the singing of "Alice, where art thou?" being particularly commendable.

On the dramatic side, Mr. Leonard Mortimer and company are seen and heard to advantage in a revival of the sensational banking-house playlet, Captain Cash, the New York Cracksman. In this Mr. Mortimer once more repeats his fine study of the part of Tom Morrison, alias Captain Cash; while Miss Ida Clifford charms the audience with her presentation of the character of the banker's ward; and Miss Hazel Head gives ample evidence of tragic ability as Vesta Lander, the adventuress. Mr. E. G. Howard as the New York banker, Mr. E. J. Collins as the detective, and Mr. Hal Brough as the Dutch thief, all submit able impersonations. Raymond's Bio-Tableaux include Wedded Against Her Will.

THE EMPRESS, BRIXTON.

One of the greatest successes of the evening here is supplied by Jordan and Harvey, the popular Hebrew comedians, who are deputising for Dale and O'Malley. Their amusing patter and cross-talk cause roars upon roars of laughter. Daisy Dormer is, as usual, scoring heavily with a couple of her old favourites, viz., "Good-night, Mr. Knight; Mr. Knight, good-night" and "Anywhere will do." She then treats the audience to some dainty dancing, and it is undoubtedly due to her exceptional ability in this direction that much of her success is due.

Low Lake and company are presenting their old winner, My Pal Jerry, the popularity of which does not yet appear to be on the wane. Enough has already been written in these columns about this to render detailed criticism unnecessary. It is sufficient to say that it went with a swing from start to finish. A very pretty Japanese scena is that of Talbot and Pearce entitled Yo-San. In this they introduce Lily Harold's greatest success "Cherry." The fine voice of Arthur Aldridge, the popular Pavilion tenor, is heard to advantage; the Carlyles, described as whirlwind dancers, certainly do not belie the description given them, and all parts of the house express their approval in a most hearty manner. F. Gratwick, a juvenile boy comedian, sings two capital songs. They are "Down in the tuppenny tube" and "Dear old Brown." Tom Drew, an eccentric comedian, is well named, his "I'd be much better in a home" being well above the average.

Miss José Collins, daughter of the celebrated Lottie, is well suited with her songs, and her neat and graceful dancing is much appreciated. The youthful voice of Helene Roberta possesses charm, and her rendering of two songs earns for her much applause. The Elduns, the lady of whom has an excellent voice, scores heavily; and Herbert Waller, a light comedian, should be heard of in the near future. Miss Kitty Alma, a chic comedienne, has certainly not spared any pains to make her turn a success, and her two numbers go with a swing from start to finish. Leaflets containing the words of these are enclosed within the programmes, and the choruses are heartily taken up. In her second number, "My Angel of Los Angeles," she enters on horseback attired as a cowboy. Dismounting, she sings this in a most telling manner, and brings her turn to a conclusion with some neat dancing. A pleasant evening is brought to a conclusion by some amusing pictures on the Bioscope. Mr. Francis Winchcombe, the popular acting-manager, does all in his power for the comfort of his patrons.

THE SURREY.

Substantial samples of musical comedy and romantic drama are contained in the current bill of fare at the Macnaghten hall in the Blackfriars-road. The former is exemplified in a new production called The Dandy Millionaire, the action of which passes on Brighton Pier. At this salubrious resort Major Paget is taking the air, when he receives news of the intended visit of a money magnate from the States, who comes with the intention of finding a wife. The Major immediately determines that his daughter shall be the rich American's bride, in spite of the fact that she is engaged to a young doctor who has just taken his degree. While the Major has gone in order to avoid meeting the doctor, whom he has never seen, the American millionaire arrives, and the Major's girl and the housemaid having changed clothes, the domestic is mistaken for the daughter. The beauty of the real "slavey" is of a character that does not appeal to the millionaire, who informs the Major that he will choose the suppositious servant, thus allowing the doctor to step in and obtain the real daughter for his bride. The piece has a number of songs and choruses, is elaborately mounted and dressed, and is smartly interpreted by Mr. Edward Marris's company. A feature of the production is the embodiment by the ladies of the chorus of a number of musical plays, the various leading characters coming forward and making a comely collection.

The drama is represented in the sketch Nana, taken from a well-known French source, which has supplied more than one play for the regular stage. Miss Dolly Elsworthy plays the title-rôle, that of the young actress who sacrifices her love and her life in order that her sweetheart's father may maintain the dignity of his house. Miss Elsworthy has in Nana a part a little removed from those to which she has lately accustomed us, and though her liveliness and gaiety are evident in the earlier scenes, she grows intensely pathetic in the later, and the cough of the consumptive girl is distressingly realistic. Miss Elsworthy is well supported by her company, which includes Mr. Adderley Howard as Duval Père, Mr. John Richter as Armand, and Mr. D. Steele as Alphonse Prudhomme. The sketch is elaborately mounted, and several calls are bestowed on the leading lady.

A high place in favour is occupied by Mr. George Mozart, whose merry monologue diverts all parts of the house. Miss Dorothy Clarke sings in refined style the romance of a soap-bubble, which is greatly appreciated; and Kurkamp, the "sing conductor," delivers from his place in the orchestra a couple of tuneful ballads in a robust tenor voice, and wins general approval. The Tramp in the Nursery allows the Forsyths to appear in a comedy and musical act, in the course of which the bells are prettily played, and a lady impersonates a doll with much skill. Miss Madge Allen is a prepossessing comedienne and a neat dancer; Leslie Lyn and Willro are justly described as "three funny fellows"; and the programme to which Edwards and Dacre, comedy sketch artists, and Frank Vallance, magician, contribute, is concluded by a picture on Raymond's Bioscope, representing the Mohawk's Revenge, in which some thrilling scenes are depicted.

EALING HIPPODROME.

The tide of prosperity in theatrical affairs set flowing by the Franco-British Exhibition has not failed to reach Ealing, and Mr. J. A. Molloy, who directs the fortunes of the Hippodrome, has had real reason to congratulate himself on the result. Included in the great Gibbons-Barrasford Combine, whose advent we announced last Saturday, a full measure of the upwards of 300 artists tabled in the staff notices will always be allotted to this house. Chirgwin, the great and only "White-eyed One," is here this week, and there is no mistake in the sound of his welcome, which commences the instant that his number goes up. He has the happy knack of not only getting across the footlights, but, so to speak, right into the hearts of his admirers. His bonhomie never deserts him, from the first squirl of his bagpipes—through all his quips and jokes—to the last notes of the ever-popular "Blind Boy."

How an imagined baby, a mare, and a mis directed letter may be made the medium of side-splitting fun is cleverly shown by Mr. and Mrs. Harold Finden in their playlet of Two to One. The mare, the baby, and the letter are exploited for all they are worth, and well serve their purpose as merriment-raisers. The Eight 'Varsity Girls form a winsome octette of little lassies who are responsible for a happy pot-pourri of song and dance, and while their solos and concerted numbers are melodiously rendered, their dancing is excellent and refined. The Brilliants, old favourites at Ealing, are expert xylophonists, who never fail to please. The overture to the Poet and Peasant loses none of its vim under their nimble execution, but the gem of their répertoire is undoubtely the except from "Morning, Noon, and Night," every dainty nuance being exquisitely interpreted.

Terry and Bentley warble merrily of how "In time of peace prepare for war." The turn is well staged, and the scarlet coat of the gentleman forms an admirable foil for the exceedingly becoming white Hussar uniform of his handsome and vivacious comrade, who, in addition to figuring as a graceful dancer, sings archly of "Don't be shy and bashful, sweetheart." Alburtus the First and Jessie Millar have some merry moments in their "Fairground." Miss Jessie introduces herself with a cornet solo of "Killarney," and afterwards presides over the cocoanuts. Her first and only client is Alburtus, who fails to score a win, but there is no failure about their subsequent club display, which wins them storms of applause. The Austral Trio have a melodious medley in their Musical Evening, the success of which is greatly assisted by a member of the trio, who is a nimble dancer. Miss Mandie Ford daintily sings of far-off Mandalay; Miss Ada Cerito, gowned in a beautiful Empire creation, carols of her "Fickle young man"; Mr. Harry Thurston repeats his latest absurdity, The Merry Widow; while the overture, also from the same source, is excellently rendered by the Hippodrome band, under the bâton of the musical director, Mr. A. M. Park. As usual, some fine films are shown on Ruffell's Bioscope.

THE PARAGON.

Previous to her departure for America Miss Vesta Victoria has been delighting the patrons of this house with her latest numbers, which are certainly excellent. Her first item, dealing with the favourite subject of "Men, men, men," is far above the average of numbers of that description. In the character of a young widow, the comedienne offers herself for marriage, with the recommendation that the suitor will have the advantage of negotiating with an "Old-established firm." Forced to respond to an encore on the night of our visit, Miss Victoria submitted the amusing song "Father," which, it is almost needless to say, is treated in the artist's own inimitable style.

Mr. Dan Crawley, one of the old style comedians, but none the less popular on that account, sings "Sailing merrily on" and "One or two more of 'em." The last, given in dame dress, evokes much laughter. Mr. Herbert Lloyd, "the King of Diamonds," is responsible for a most enjoyable entertainment, consisting of dancing, juggling, comedy, &c., the smart changes being very clever. Cardow's Merry Yachtsmen form a quartet of capital entertainers, their business being refined, bright, and amusing. Their final concerted number is capitally rendered. Carlton causes great laughter with his droll gags whilst manipulating his pack of cards, which he seems to place just where he wishes. His dice and box trick is bewildering, especially to those gentlemen who command him to "open all de four." Messrs. Tate and Tate, "the Barmaid and her Eccentric Customer," are decidedly clever acrobats, the male partner performing many difficult feats. He is ably supported by the young lady, who also proves herself an able tumbler. Mr. Harry Clifford sings a tuneful song, viz., "Oh, Johnnies, there's a locket in your pocket," which possesses a catchy refrain, and another, "When I get home from work," which is also well received. Miss Mayme Cannon, a talented young lady, sings a difficult song, imitating three voices, whilst accompanying herself on the piano. She also plays on the instrument with her wrists, elbows, &c. The Four Mexicans give clever exhibitions in the art of lasso-throwing and lariat-manipulating, and certainly excel in the business, the lady being extremely gifted.

Phil Ree's Stable Lads provide an enjoyable turn of tuneful singing, dancing, and all-round fun, which is kept well going by the two youngsters. They are all bright boys, each doing his respective "bit" perfectly. The Lyric Mummers, lady and gentleman, render some excellent duets, the voices blending to a nicety. The Paolias perform difficult athletic feats, for which they are warmly applauded; Miss Daisy Dormer, the daintiest of dancers, gives "Anywhere will do" and "Good-night, Mr. Knight," concluding with a fancy dance. Other turns include Miss Venie Clements (child impersonator), Robbie Roy (Scotch comedian), and Miss Ida Barr, a charming burlesque actress with a couple of good songs. Ruffell's Bioscope completes an excellent programme, upon which Mr. Chas. Mark, together with his courteous lieutenant, Mr. Pierre Cohen, may be congratulated.

BATTERSEA PALACE.

A programme of exceptional attractiveness is submitted this week to the patrons of the Battersea Palace. Sketches are always a staple item, and this feature is strongly in evidence. The principal is Married for Revenge, smartly played by Mr. Fred Moule—who gives a fine performance of the Rev. Cuthbert Belveton—and his capable company. It is well mounted and artistically dressed.

Another very prominent item is an amusing musical comedietta, entitled The Star of the Bazaar, by Miss Alice Hughes and company. The Vicar of a certain parish has given an entertainment to his congregation, and engaged a professional to recite to them, but who is unable to appear. In her place a well-known musical comedy actress is sent, who gives the curate a specimen of her abilities in song and dance, much to his undoing. In the meantime the congregation are waiting, and the servant recognises the actress as a member of a gang of diamond thieves of which he was formerly a member. Her object is to relieve the vicar of his diamonds, &c., but the scheme is frustrated by the servant, who forces the lady to leave the house without carrying out her mission. This amusing trifle is well played by Miss Alice Hughes, who, as Dulcie Darenot, scores a success for her singing and sprightly dancing. Mr. F. R. Larin presents the Rev. Willie Wood in the recognised stage fashion, and Mr. Chas. Dillon does well as the faithful servant James, whose continual interruption with the phrase, "the congregation's waiting," causes much laughter.

The remainder of the programme is up to the usual high standard of this hall. Mr. Edward Kay, an excellent comedian, sings "Why should I work?" in an agreeable manner; Miss Eva Roslyn is a charming comedienne and dancer; the Cromwells present a novel and unique juggling act; La Belle Maie submits a good performance on the tight wire; Mr. E. W. Selman creates an excellent impression by two ditties, "If you want to choose a girl, choose her in the morning" and "Kitty, isn't it a pity?"; Miss Josephine Crook scores her usual success in two illustrated songs, entitled "The skirl of the pipes" and "Far away in Australia"; Bains and Reed give an original speciality Humpsti Bumpsti, introducing some clever acrobatic feats; and the Melburns, deputising for Mme. Eldee, are a smart duo of cross-talkers. The programme is brought to a close by a good picture exhibited by Raymond's Bio-tableaux, entitled Sherlock Holmes. Mr. James McCarthy, manager, is gaining great popularity in this district.

JOHN DAVIS, of Beresford-road, Canonbury, was summoned at the North London Police-court on Thursday for keeping a dog without a licence. The defendant said that he was fireman and night watchman at the Holloway Empire. He took out a licence (produced) for this dog last year, but had since kept the animal at the Empire, and was under the impression that he was exempt from a licence for a watch-dog. Mr. Bros: You are not exempt, but I will take your excuse into consideration, and only order you to pay costs, 2s.

RE APPLICATIONS FOR ENGAGEMENTS

All applications by either Artists or their Agents must be made to the Head Office.

Lowest terms must be stated, and distinction made between salaries required for larger and smaller towns.

Vacant dates should be stated. If a list of existing bookings be sent, it will render selection easier.

Artists employing Agents should accredit one only at one time, as the friction arising when several Agents are employed at the same time, all expecting the one booking to go through each of them, often renders it expedient to avoid that booking altogether rather than give undeserved offence to several Agents.

New Acts seeking Engagements, or turns not rebooked (possibly because they have played a series of dates without introducing new business), will facilitate matters by having their acts seen by our District Managers. Their Districts and Postal Addresses are as follow:

EDINBURGH, GLASGOW, NEWCASTLE, AND DISTRICT.
MR. S. GETHING,
Empire Theatre, Glasgow.

LEEDS, SHEFFIELD, HULL, BRADFORD, AND DISTRICT.
MR. T. GERALD MORTON,
Empire Palace, Leeds.

BIRMINGHAM, NOTTINGHAM, LEICESTER, AND DISTRICT.

N.B.—MR. OSWALD STOLL or MR. FRANK ALLEN can be seen by appointment on all matters arising out of the above, and for the discussion of entirely new Numbers.

All Artists or Agents who communicate with our District Representatives must have made definite applications, in accordance with above directions, to the Head Office, at the same time, or just previously.

The princess wakes up to fall asleep again a moment later. This time it is the Water Fairy who pays her a visit. The poor man does his best to hide her in all the cup-boards he can think of until the aunt is made suspicious, and the girl makes her escape through a window, leaving her husband alone to explain matters.

He ascends the lamp-post, climbs up to the roofs, clasps a chimney-top, and feels himself carried away in the air by a strong wind. Presently he reaches the moon, borne by the hurricane. Scarcely has he reached her, however, than the Moon sends him down to earth again with a strange swiftness, and Pierrot wakes up in his bed, quite astonished at his strange nightmare.

BENVENUTO CELLINI.

Code Word, "FEU."

Cellini was a famous Italian engraver, sculptor, and goldsmith, whom Francis I., King of France, called to his Court. One day the artist received at his studio the following letter: "A great lady of the Court wishes to sit to you, on the strict understanding that you never seek to discover who she is." He greets with surprise the unexpected model, whose features are hidden behind a mask, and he carves out from same the graceful statue known as "The Nymph of Fontainebleau." Upon the model's refusal to unmask, Cellini kidnaps her and writes to the king, who had been interested in the artist's work, that if he will kindly come to his studio he will introduce the lady to him. The king arrives, and finds himself in the presence of the Duchess of Etampes, his favourite. Cellini had to leave France after this incident.

A TROUBLED SOUL.

Code Word, "FILIGRANE."

A Scotchman goes to sleep after drinking a good portion of a bottle of whisky. In his dream he goes to a land of light. St. Peter, whom he recognises by the keys he is carrying, sends him off to where all drunkards go. The poor man sinks far down into the clouds, and back to earth again. A curious thing is, that, although he has taken back his human form again, the tramcars and carriages pass through his body without doing him any harm. Yet, Satan appearing to him, the Scotchman tumbles down into an abyss. The fall causes him to wake up, and, realising that the whisky gave him this nightmare, he swears never to drink a drop of it again—till the next time.

ELECTRIC HOTEL.

Code Word, "FIORITURE."

The hotel of the future is the Electric Hotel. You need only touch an electric button, and immediately you have what you require. Do you want a brush up? You press a button and the brush comes by itself and performs its work. Do you want your hair to be done up, or your husband a shave? You are attended to in a tick. Should the distribution board get out of order, however, then you would have to pay the ransom of progress, as is shown in this film. This is a very laughable subject, which has proved a great success.

495ft. The Subject, £8 5s. 0d.

Code Word, "FIERTE."

Young Blunderer is a merry student who does not want to get married yet in spite of a letter just received from a wealthy aunt who practically commands him to marry a girl of her own choice whom she is sending him from the country, accompanied by her father and mother. Blunderer, who is just having a lady friend to dinner, makes his servant receive the uninvited guests in his stead, and has the lady friend locked up in a cupboard. While Jack is making love to the country girl at the same time as enjoying the dinner served by his master, loud knocks are heard at the door. It is the lady friend who wants to step out of the cupboard, and Mr. and Mrs. Pleasant look bewildered. They breathe more freely, however, on seeing the pretty lady throw her arms round the would-be servant's neck. But when Blun-derer calls in a policeman to punish his impudent servant, it is Blunderer himself who is marched off on the evidence of the Pleasant family.

528ft. The Subject, £8 16s. 0d.

Code Word, "FIOLE."

Messrs. H. Kéroul and A. Barré, the talented farcical playwrights, and applauded authors of "Billet de Logement," "La Nuit de Noces," &c., give us with "The French Cupboard" their first cinematograph play. Mr. Lover has stepped into a French cupboard in order to escape the notice of the furniture dealer, whose wife has been flirting with him; unfortunately the cupboard has to be delivered at once to the address of people in all the tupsy-turviness of a removal. Through a chink in his cupboard he sees the table being laid in Mr. and Mrs. Exo's room, and during the latter's absence he helps himself to the good things spread on the table. There ensues a quarrel between the husband and wife when they see that their things have disappeared. After a series of other laughable incidents peace is once more restored, and Mr. Lover, leaving his hiding-place, explains the theft. Such is the plot of this play, so frankly amusing and droll, acted with wit and cheerfulness by the exhilarating Prince, of the Variety Theatre, F. Frey, of the Ambassadeurs, Dutard of the Olympia, and Mme. Delza, of the Vaudeville Theatre.

676ft. The Subject, £11 5s. 4d.

CHRISTMAS: From the Birth of Christ to the Twentieth Century

NOTABLE URBAN-ECLIPSE CHRISTMAS FILM SUBJECT.

A beautifully conceived and charmingly executed life-motion picture story of the Nativity, and its celebration in different Countries at various Epochs of the Christian Era.

The importance of securing an early copy cannot be too strongly impressed. The demand will be great, but the supply is only sufficient to meet the estimated calls. The hand colouring is a matter of weeks, therefore to ensure exhibition at Christmastide it is advisable to place orders even thus early.

Immense pains and expense have been bestowed upon this subject; months of preparation, months more in actual work have been spent, entailing long journeys by the whole staff engaged, to secure the accurate surroundings and congenial atmosphere of the various episodes. The colouring of the winter scenes and their harmonising contrasts, the snow, cloud, sun, and smoke effects, is superb; while that of the interiors is no less excellent.

The setting of the various scenes is as perfect as experience, skill, and means can produce, the enactment has been entrusted to accomplished and experienced artists, and the result of this harmonious combination is a picture which will appeal to every audience in every country which has even a rudimentary knowledge of what Christmas implies.

ORDER OF PICTURES:

1. "GLAD TIDINGS OF GREAT JOY." Angels announcing the Birth of Christ.
2. THE NATIVITY. Bethlehem Manger and its Divine occupant.
3. EARLY CHRISTIAN ERA. Landing of the early Christians. The Miracle. Vision Scene: The Nativity.
4. FRA ANGELICO, the Artist-Monk, sleeping. His celebrated Fresco is painted by angelic visitors.
5. FLEMISH LEGEND. Apparition of St. Joseph. The Flight into Egypt to escape the Massacre of the Innocents commanded by King Herod.
6. THE HIGHWAYMEN'S LEGEND. Feudal Times; scenes of great interest and beauty FINALE. THE BELFRY. Snow scene. Blessing the Bells. The Midnight Chime: "Peace Upon Earth."
7. AN ALSATIAN CHRISTMAS. Lovely and graphic scenes reproducing every phase and feature of midnight Christmas Mass.
8. CHRISTMAS IN THE XVII. CENTURY (FRANCE). Interior and exterior scenes at a country mansion. Santa Claus. The Minuet. The Vision.
9. CHRISTMAS IN THE XX. CENTURY (FRANCE). General rejoicings, Tableau Vivants.

HENRY IRVING SHAKESPEARE.

A NEW AND CHEAP EDITION OFFERED TO "THE ERA" READERS ON SPECIALLY ADVANTAGEOUS TERMS.

THERE can be little doubt that the whole profession should have this Edition of the great dramatist's works, arranged as it has been by the greatest Shakespearean actor of modern times, in conjunction with Mr. Frank A. Marshall; with extensive Notes and Introductions by Joseph Knight, O. F. Adams, H. A. Evans, P. L. Round, Dr. Richard Garnett, A. Symons, W. J. Rolfe, A. Wilson Verity, Canon Beeching, P. A. Daniel, and Prof. Edward Dowden.

The Edition has many features to recommend it, which here can merely be touched upon: "Shakespeare as a Playwright" by Sir H. Irving, "An Appreciation of Sir Henry Irving" from the pen of Bram Stoker, "Shakespeare's Country" contributed by Jerome Harrison, being, perhaps, the most important. Whilst the text is given unmutilated, un-Bowdlerized, Sir Henry has specially marked those portions which can, in his judgment, best be omitted in dramatic presentation.

The books have been specially illustrated by celebrated artists and each has a coloured frontispiece.

Send 6/- to-day, and complete edition in 14 volumes will be despatched, carriage paid; nine monthly payments of a similar sum and one payment of 3/- will complete the purchase.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS.)

[Provincial correspondents are requested to forward with their next week's reports a full list of the theatres and music-halls in their respective towns; also the names of the present lessees and managers, for insertion in "The Era" Annual, 1909.]

ABERDEEN.—His Majesty's Theatre.—Managing-Director, Mr. Robert Arthur; Acting-Manager, Mr. H. Adair Nelson.—A Royal Divorce is the play this week. Mr. Keith Fraser gives a skilful conception of the Emperor Napoleon; and Mr. Percy H. Vernon is successful as Talleyrand. Miss Margaret Watson is a sympathetic and dignified Josephine; Marie Louise is well played by Miss Winnie Tempest; Mr. Stanley Harrison shows conspicuous skill as the Marquis Beaumont, as do also Mr. Walter T. Clifford and Mr. Herbert S. Standing in the parts of General Augureau and Marshal Moreau. The play is finely staged.

Palace Theatre. — Lessees, The United County Theatres, Ltd.; Manager, Mr. Walter Gilbert.—Mr. Leoni Clarke and his menagerie of cats, monkeys, and rabbits do wonders this week; Mr. Hal Forde, comedian, is encored again and again; Miss Marie Collins is heartily welcomed; Mr. Josh Dixon shows great humour and agility as a comedian; Little Frankie, the Highland laddie, is rapturously applauded; and among the other distinctive turns should be mentioned those of Miss Jenny and Mr. Will Fordyce, duettists and dancers, and Mr. Charles Rowen, a smart comedian. The Mezzettis show themselves masters of the art of blending comedy with smart acrobaticism.

Alhambra Music Hall.—Proprietor, Mr. John Sinclair; General-Manager, Mr. G. B. Lee.—The programme this week is of distinctive merit. Among the best of the turns are those of Mr. Alf. Walker, an excellent comedian; the Handleys, superior comedians; the Real Mackays, exceptionally graceful juvenile dancers and singers; and Mr. Alexander Smith, a first-class baritone vocalist, who also acts as soloist to the illustrated song-pictures.

Empire Music Hall. — Managers, Messrs. K. Calder and J. Montague.—Large audiences are the rule in this popular house. Mr. Jack Marson, who excels both as a vocalist and a raconteur, is the principal turn, and among the exceedingly capable artists who support him are Miss Marie Rose, vocalist and dancer; Mr. James Montague, entertainer and conjurer; Mr. Arthur Bright, topical vocalist; and Mr. Archie Murray, coon comedian.

ABERTILLERY.—Metropole Theatre.—Lessee and Manager, Mr. C. J. Seaborn.—The Way of the World is being played to good houses by Messrs. Herbert Skardon and Sherwood Martin's talented company. Mr. Skardon gives an excellent impersonation of Cecil Hardy, and gains applause for his powerful acting; Miss Sydney Crowe effectively portrays the part of Lady Adela Hardy, and wins high appreciation. The minor parts are in capable hands, and good comedy is produced. The scenery and effects assist to make the production a great success.

Pavilion.—Lessees, E. and H. Tilney; Manager, Mr. E. Pryce.—The chief feature of this week's bill is A Traitor Prince, by Montague Beaudyn's powerful company, each artist of which shows great dramatic powers. The mounting is especially good. The Della Sisters are an excellent pair of vocalists; and the Katos in the Komical Kidgets, delight the house; the Three Krakes provide much amusement in their absurdity, Electric Tramcar Conductor; Miss Jessie Wilton is a pleasing comedienne, and interesting films are shown on the Bioscope.

ACCRINGTON.—Prince's Theatre.—Proprietor, and Manager, Mr. J. B. Ormerod; Acting-Manager, Mr. J. E. Barnes.—Mrs. Sam Duckworth's company in The Conscience of a Judge was well received here on Monday. Mr. Douglas C. Phelps is excellent in the part of Judge Granstone; Mr. A. Lubinoff acts with ability as Sir Edwin Mervin; Mr. Martin Pedler gives a clever study of Cecil Bentley; and Mr. Norton Kelly as Geoffrey Granstone is all that can be desired; Mr. Dalton Bosher as John Summers and Mr. Frank Eden as Horatio Winters are responsible for much hilarity in the comedy parts, being ably assisted by Miss Bessie Frank as Mary Wilson. Miss Eva Moss acts with sympathetic charm as Jessica Draycott; Miss Mabel Coleman fills the difficult rôle of Ethel Vaughan to advantage; and Miss Elsie Isaacs proves herself a capable artist as Little Kitty.

ALDERSHOT.—Royal and Hippodrome.—Lessee and Manager, Mr. Clarence Sounes; Acting-Manager, Mr. J. Gladwin.—Baron Harriss' company is on a return visit with The Prince of Pilsen. Miss Sophie Harriss is again seen to advantage as the widow, and Mr. Harry Kilburn sustains the rôle of Hans Wagner.

ASHTON-UNDER-LYNE.—Theatre Royal.—Sole Owner and Manager, Mr. Chas. Revill; Acting-Manager, Mr. Charles Revill, jun.—The Levy-Cardwell company of comedians and soubrettes is presenting a two-act comedy-burlesque, entitled A Merry Maid, here. Miss May Gibson as Peggy O'Hooligan is brimming over with fun, and dances herself into favour; Mr. Vivian Wakeman is most comical as Larry Hooligan; Thady Clancy, Peggy's sweetheart, is a "broth of a boy" in the hands of Mr. Howard Lawrence; and as the "English Johnny," the Hon. Cecil Toft, Mr. Neil Hardy is well cast. The acting of the precocious boy, George Wood, is undoubtedly the prime feature in the piece, and Miss Fanny Adamson is also excellent in the character of Angela.

Empire Hippodrome.—Proprietors, Messrs. W. H. Broadhead and Son; Resident-Acting-Manager, Mr. W. Leech.—Lockhart's elephants, a remarkable performing troupe, do some remarkable acts under the direct control of Capt. J. Taylor, the proprietor; Jack Waller, a good exponent of comedy, mixes music and sentiment with good effect; Hemsley and Ambrose, comedy duo, introduce their original absurdity on the results of motoring; the clever acrobatic skate-dancer, McCann, also secures the ear and eye of the house; under the name of Herr Karoly Czynski will be recognised an artist well known here, as he was formerly the expert drummer of the resident orchestra of the Empire. On his varied instruments—the cymbalom, xylophone, and drum—he is undoubtedly an artist. Cecilia Gold is aptly described as a dainty exponent of burlesque and song; Smith and Johnson, society coloured duo, are favourite nigger performers here; Jack Truman, tenor, sings some favourite ditties; O'Malley and Brown give a comedy sketch, You're Still a Friend of Mine, with ability; and the Bioscope shows the vagaries of the Tramp's Daughter.

Picturedrome.—Lessees, Messrs. Weisker Bros.—New cinematograph pictures for the week include A Chase for a Husband, The Silent Hotel, The Music Teacher, and many other scenes. Perhaps the most vivid and exciting scene enacted in several parts is A Gipsy's Revenge, and A Mexican Tragedy is positively nerve tingling in its apparent reality. A young lady gives a couple of tuneful songs, including the popular "Lily Bell," and is aided by a pretty coloured picture, and a clever and expert juggler entertains the audience. There is a baby-show competition

ATTERCLIFFE.—Palace Theatre of Varieties.—Proprieor, Mr. T. Allan Edwardes; Acting-Manager, Mr. Bert Dent; Assistant-Manager, Mr. Harry Sanders.—Topping the bill this week is Captain Roberts, who gives a most extraordinary performance as musician, athlete, and balancer. He has the assistance of Curt and Alexander, two comical acrobatic boys. The Musical Keiths (lady and gentleman) are deservedly applauded for a pleasing act; Miss Cara Magda gives a smart gymnastic exhibition; a laughter-provoking farce, The Millionaire, is given by Mr. Johnny Holland and company; Mr. R. C. Clayton's pictures are still a popular feature; other turns are provided by Miss Nellie Walton, the "singing mill girl; Mr. Harry Levaine; and Diamond and Hart, comedians. During the week a "beauty show" for ladies is being run, and substantial prizes are offered by the management.

BACUP.—New Court Theatre.—Lessee and Manager, Mr. Frank Denman-Wood.—Miss Maud Western and company are here this week, and on Monday and the following night appeared in The Prodigal Son. Jack Fanshaw is played in capital style by Mr. P. Braithwaite, who is ably supported by Mr. W. A. Buxtone as Captain Harry Fanshaw. Mr. John Levey as Bill Burke is responsible for some fine acting; Mr. Edwin Turner appears as the villainous Ralph Marsden, and plays the part with considerable ability; Mr. F. Dudley does full justice to the character of Sir John Fanshaw; as Margaret Marsden Miss Ada Hender is very natural; and Miss Doris Dallimore acts with much feeling as Bill's sister, Nellie. Mr. Carl Vallinder as Larry M'Gehan and Miss Maud Western as Mary keep the house well amused. A Mother's Salvation and Queen's Evidence are billed for the remainder of the week.

BARNSLEY.—Theatre Royal.—Manager, Mr. A. C. Mitchell.—The Great Awakening is being presented here by Miss Maud Hildyard and company. Miss Hildyard in the rôle of the adventuress, Lola Selby, plays with her usual ability and success; Mr. Herbert Robinson depicts the blackguardly Guy Rogan satisfactorily; and Mr. Cecil Gray is responsible for Sir Henry Merton and Jack Merton (his son), and acquits himself with credit; Mr. Conrad Franklyn renders good support as Captain Harry Lambert; and Miss Elsie Capel is effective as Molly Merton. Mr. Tracey Barrow is responsible for much humour in his presentation of Billy Brass, and Miss Cissie Podmore scores as Selina Werts.

New Empire Palace.—Proprietors, The Barnsley Empire Palace, Ltd.; Managing-Director, Mr. Will Smithson.—The chief items on the programme here are T. E. Finglass, the ideal coon; Edmund Casselli, an expert on the banjo; Viviana and company in a novel dancing scena; and the Martelloni family of acrobats; the Three Pirmans are amusing and clever in a gymnastic act; Mlle. Lucretia in songs and dance is pleasing, and Gravetta and Parr, American novelty artists, and the Palacescope conclude.

BARNSTAPLE.—Theatre Royal.—Proprietors, the Long Bridge Trustees; Manager, Mr. Harry Ashton.—Mr. Chas. H. Lester's company, with The Sorrows of Satan, was the attraction here for three nights this week. As Prince Lucio Mr. Lester invested the part with a strenuousness and diabolical suavity that left nothing to be desired; Mr. Harry T. Wood made a vigorous and successful Geoffrey Tempest; Mr. Horace Buckley provided comedy as Morris; Mr. Chris. Felton and Mr. Richard Bosco gave due effect to the respective parts of Lord Lynton and Amiel. Miss Dorothy Riddell created an excellent impression with her dignified and forceful acting as Mavis Clare; and Senorita Bianca Fernandez as Lady Sybil provided an admirable representation of the wayward wife. The Bank of England and A Life for a Life were presented by the same company.

BARROW-IN-FURNESS. — Royalty Theatre and Opera House.—Lessee, and Manager, Mr. Hugh Robertson; Resident-Manager, Mr. George Stone. —Mr. H. Hamilton Stewart's company, in Sherlock Holmes, is here again. In the title-rôle Mr. Stewart gives a most interesting performance; and Mr. Arthur Shelton as Dr. Watson is conspicuously successful. Mr. Mark D. Draper as James Larabee and Mr. Douglas Murray as Sydney Prince are effective and Miss Betty Fairfax is successful as Alice Faulkner.

His Majesty's Theatre.—Lessees and Managers, Mr. and Mrs. Calvert Routledge.—Mr. Fredk. Mouillot's No. 1 company, in The Beloved Vagabond, is here. Mr. Arthur Royston makes a distinguished Paragot and Miss Nita Faydon plays Blanquette with exceptional ability. Miss Kathleen Harrington is an artistic Joanna Rushworth and Mr. Ramsey Macbeth is a capital Asticot. The Comte de Verneuil has a capable exponent in Mr. Warburton Gamble.

Tivoli.—Lessee and Manager, Signor Pepi; Acting-Manager, Mr. Edgar Laban.—At the top of the bill here is a comedy act entitled Music Mad, by the Leslie Brothers, in which they cause roars of laughter. Harrigan and Holt are capital comedians; Baby Vi Davies is a very popular turn; Stirling and Love give a pleasing musical sketch; Arthur Woodville, comedian and dancer, has a capital reception; and Vernon's Bioscope is quite a success.

BARRY DOCK. — Theatre Royal and Hippodrome.—Managing-Director, Mr. Arthur Carlton; Acting-Manager, Mr. Arthur Brogden.—Messrs. F. Marriott Watson and Sanderson Moffat have presented the musical drama What a Woman Did, which was very well received by a crowded house. Chief honours go to Miss Florence E. Florence, whose acting as Elise de L'Orme was an exposition of dramatic skill and elocution; Mr. Sanderson Moffat as Conrad was really excellent; the same remark applies to Mr. Marriott Watson as Raffaele Durnc, ably assisted in his villainous schemes by Mr. Reg. Kloof as Black Pitou; as Fritz Mr. C. Elton Morgan scored; Mr. Owen Edwin as Peter Pippin was very eccentric; Miss Phyllis Hamilton acted the part of La Papillon admirably; Mrs. Violet Sheridan as Bella was loudly applauded, her singing and dancing being decidedly good; Miss Nora Waylett as Nanette was highly diverting; the Clancy Girls deserve notice, their dancing especially being good. The production is well staged.

BATH.—Theatre Royal.—Lessee and Manager, Mr. Egbert Lewis; Acting-Manager, Mr. Lewis A. Long.—The Hypocrites, with its strong moral lesson, is arousing no little stir amongst local playgoers here this week. Mr. Chas. Frohman's company, under the direction of Mr. Silvanus Dauncey, present the play with excellent results. Mr. A. B. Imeson scores a legitimate success as the Rev. Edgar Linnell; Mr. Ernest H. Ruston is well cast as Mr. Wilmore; Mr. F. G. Thurstans has done nothing better than the Rev. E. Daubeney; and Mr. Charles Tyrel as Sir John Plagenet has an easy task for so good an actor. Mr. Frederick Morland enacts Mr. Viveash with capital emphasis and the Lennard Wilmore of Mr. John Dennys has much to commend it. First honours amongst the ladies is deservedly won by Miss Laura Graves as Mrs. Wilmore; Miss Muriel Pope as the erring, but more sinned against, Rachel Neve acts with becoming grace; and a pleasing Helen Plagenet is found in Miss Muriel Mason. Miss Sybil Brooke as the ever-suspicious Mrs. Blaney is very amusing. Others in the cast who must be accorded praise are Mr. Fred Lake (Dr. Blaney), Miss Madge Severn (Mrs. Linnell), and Miss Eva Turnour (Patty).

Palace Theatre.—Proprietor, Mr Frank Macnaghten; Manager, Mr. Chas. Schuberth.—A surprisingly clever duo are the Davenports, who, as magicians and illusionists, present a remarkable interlude here this week. John Humphries, the well-known comedian, appears in a "farcette," entitled Ancient Britons, which causes many a laugh; Lily Eyton proves herself to be a comedienne in a couple of pretty ditties; the Four Cecilians meet with quite an ovation in their musical act; Walter Clyde, tenor vocalist, comes in for a good reception; Jimson's dogs are well trained, and cause endless amusement; Sadie Simpson, comedienne and dancer, is on a return visit; and Raymond's Bio-Tableaux unfold new and interesting films.

Taylor-Platt and Trevor Lowe's company is presenting two of Bernard Shaw's comedies, You Never Can Tell and Arms and the Man. In the first-named, which is billed for the first part of the week, Mr. Leslie Hamer as Valentine showed real power; Mr. Trevor Lowe gave a clever impersonation of the Waiter; Mr. Edward J. Pearce was an admirable exponent of Fergus Crampton; and Mr. Charles Daly caused much fun as Finch McComas; Miss Katherine Stuart made a dignified Mrs. Clandon, and Miss Calar Earle a vivacious Dolly Clandon. Mr. Donald Calthrop was good as Philip, and grace and distinction marked Miss Gwladys Morris's portrayal of Gloria.

BELFAST. — Theatre Royal. — Managing-Director, Mr. Fred W. Warden; Acting-Manager, Mr. James M. McCann.—The annual visit of the Royal Carl Rosa Opera Company is eagerly anticipated by Belfast playgoers, and a large audience greeted the opening performance on Monday, when Carmen was presented. In the title-rôle Miss Doris Woodall achieved a triumph by her delightful impersonation, her acting and singing being worthy of the highest praise; Don José was done full justice to by Mr. Edward Davies, his vocalism being much admired; and the part of Micaela was satisfactorily sustained by Mme. Ina Hill. Mr. Hebden Foster must be congratulated on his fine assumption of the rôle of Escamillo, his capital rendering of the "Toreador" song gaining him a terrific reception. Miss Annie Walker and Miss Christine Ritz were excellent as Frasquita and Mercedes; and Mr. Alex. Richard appeared to advantage as Zuniga. Other rôles were sustained by Messrs. William Rousell, Albert Felton, and Fredk. Clendon. Mr. Walter van Noorden acted as conductor, with his usual efficiency. On Tuesday Faust was presented, with Miss Elizabeth Burgess and Mr. Walter Wheatley in the cast; and Cavalleria Rusticana, Pagliacci, The Merry Wives of Windsor, Tannhäuser, The Marriage of Figaro, and The Bohemian Girl are also in the week's bill.

Palace Theatre of Varieties.—Managing-Director, Mr. Fred W. Warden; General-Manager, Mr. J. de Freece; Resident-Manager, Mr. W. A. Salmond.—Arthur Roberts and company top the bill here, and provide amusement with the farcical sketch Till Sunday; M. Edouard José presents The Strike, a dramatic episode, with much success; and a hit has been made by Ross and Grayson, the musical comedy couple, in their "piano playing extraordinary." Excellence in dancing is exhibited by the Brothers Dean; and Mr. Bert Kemble, comedian; Miss Marie Glenn, Scotch vocalist; and the Palace Pictures, are also in the bill.

Royal Hippodrome. — Managing-Director, Messrs. Will Sley and Fred Willmott; Resident-Manager, Mr. Henry T. Downs.—The star here is Mr. Charles Aldrich, a smart American entertainer, whose humorous character impersonations are very successful; Jan Rudenyi appears to much advantage in The Power of Music, his performance on the violin being loudly encored; the Society Quartette please all with their vocalism and smart dancing; and Thorpe and Coe, duologue artists, take honours with their humorous sketch. The Sisters Maudsley are charming duettists and dancers; and the programme also includes Mr. Harry Curwen and Marie Belle, burlesque artists, Mr. Chris Masters, comedian, the Maningos, equilibrists, Rell and Butt, and the Hipposcope.

Empire Theatre of Varieties, Lyd.—General-Manager, Mr. Frank Allen; Acting-Manager, Mr. John A. Walker.—The premier attraction here is furnished by Mr. Charles Fisher's Pocket Opera Company, who present with great success Il Trovatore, the vocalism of the members of the company being first class. Will and Alice Vokes gain a good reception for their dancing display; and Miss Nellie Moore, an actress of much merit, exhibits exceptional ability in her character impersonations. As a male impersonator Miss Madge Osmond is worthy of special mention; and Mr. Jack Smiles is a versatile comedian with good songs. Kelly; Acting-Manager, Mr. Reginald Grant; Secretary, Miss Isabel Morris.—Mr. Frederick Mouillot's A Message from Mars company, on a welcome return visit, is deservedly doing big business. On the present occasion Mr. Wallace Widdicombe gives a fine rendering of Horace Parker; Mr. William H. Brougham in the title-rôle displays a thorough grasp of the character; Mr. Norman Clark as the Tramp acquits himself with marked ability; Miss Parker is admirably impersonated by Miss Flora Hastings; Miss Rose Helene is well suited as Minnie Temple; Mr. Robert Grey, Mr. Eric Ward, Mr. Eustace French, Miss Peggy E. Yeomen, and Miss Mary Glenbrane accord most valuable assistance, and the piece is liberally staged, the illusionary and electrical effects being excellently managed.

PRINCE OF WALES'S THEATRE.—Lessees, Messrs. Rodgers, Ltd.; Manager, Mr. J. F. Graham; Acting-Manager, Mr. Henry Johnston.—Mr. and Mrs. Kendal are once more rejoicing their admirers with their annual visit. On Monday, The Elder Miss Blossom was seen to conquer again, and on Tuesday, the new play, The Whirlpool, was presented. In this, Mrs. Kendal as Constance brought many charms to bear on the audience. There was laughter in her voice, and tears, which were very catching; Mr. Kendal's acting as Elijah was without a single flaw, as might be expected, and gratified his admirers intensely. Mr. Edmund Gurney was a strong card as the eccentric Ephraim; and Mr. Bassett Roe, Mrs. A. B. Tapping, Mr. W. M. Rutherford, and Miss Ethel Dane yielded goodly support. The House of Clay was presented on Thursday.

ALEXANDRA THEATRE.—Proprietor and Manager, Mr. Lester Collingwood; Acting-Manager, Mr. W. T. Guest.—The delightful pathos of Two Little Vagabonds is exercising all its old power to charm and fascinate this week. Hardie and Von Leer's company is excellent all-round. The splendid camaraderie of the titular rôles, Dick and Wally, is acted in spirit and in truth by the Misses Denise Zaleski and Alice Leon; Mr. Richard A. Greene plays the hero in a fine manly fashion as George Thornton; Mr. Arthur E. Melbourne makes a very adequate Captain Darville; Mr. Joseph Brandon is successful as Scarth; Mullins and his confederates, Bunce and "The Coughdrop," are represented in their true colours by Messrs. Benson Kleve, Stanley Field, and Fred Archer; and Miss Florence Dalton, Miss Marion Fawcett, and Miss Marie Pritchard are good in the other prominent rôles.

METROPOLE THEATRE.—Proprietor and Manager, Mr. Andrew Melville; Acting-Manager, Mr. J. Hindle Taylor.—Mr. Frederick Melville's company has by no means outstayed its welcome during the twelve nights that Married to the Wrong Man has been played, on the contrary, business has increased these last few nights appreciably. The play loses nothing on acquaintance, and the company shines as before. Miss Gertrude Boswell continues in her forceful and pathetic portrayal of the heroine; and others include Miss Mary Pemberton, Miss May Davies, Mr. Oswald Cray, Mr. H. Lane Bayliff, Mr. Chas. Vivian, and Mr. Sid Claydon.

CARLTON THEATRE, SALTLEY.—Licensee and Manager, Mr. James Alexander.—Large audiences have applauded the course of Mr. E. H. Knight's production here, The Lighthouse Robbery. Miss Hilda Baynton has elicited the warm sympathies of the house by her clever acting of the ward, Rose Prescott; Mr. Henry Herne's natural and fine embodiment of the fisherman, Tom Manly, is applauded with zest; Mr. Percy Beresford extracts every particle of value from the rôle of James Hammond; Mr. William Annesley shows fit capabilities for that of Squire Hammond, otherwise William Farren; Miss Alice Francis has a congenial rôle as Ruth Manly; Miss Ida Millais is very clever as Mrs. Manly; Little Ethel Lovatt acts prettily as Nellie; and the characters of Sam Kidder, David Morris, and the Rev. George Medhurst are rendered capably by Messrs. Sammy Foster, Herbert Lewis, and Chas. Mackay.

THEATRE ROYAL, ASTON.—Lessee, Mr. Charles Barnard; General-Manager, Mr. E. Hewitson; Acting-Manager, Mr. Charles Lake.—Messrs. Paumier and Howard's latest romantic production, The Prince and the Beggar Maid, is making its mark here, such audiences and such enthusiasm being rare, even for this prosperous home of the drama. The acting of Mr. Alfred Brandon, in the part of Prince Hildred, is full of good points; Mr. Melville Bickford shows great discrimination in his acting of the Prince Michael; Mr. Ernest Cox displays the chivalrous qualities of Prince Olaf to much admiration; Miss Ethel Bracewell acquits herself as the pseudo beggar-maid, really the Princess Monica, in quite the proper spirit and feeling; Miss Gertrude Branscombe, as the beggar-maid herself, Camioli, is all that the character could be; and the others are exceedingly fine.

PALACE THEATRE, BORDESLEY.—Managing-Director, Mr. Oswald Stoll; Acting-Manager, Mr. W. Goodwin Woodward.—A Girl's Cross Roads is drawing well-pleased audiences here, praise being general for Mr. Walter Melville's excellent company. Out of a combination of patter and business and instrumental music Tom and Marie Motramo make up a broad comedy sketch, entitled Do You Reverse? and in Nell of the Halls Mabel Bardine and company find the materials for an effective little drama, very acceptably presented. Syd May does doubly well with his imitations of variety stars and his amusing wrestling skit; and other popular prolonged turns are contributed by Cruikshank, with songs pathetic and humorous; and by Will English, with coon lyrics and eccentricities; while Harry Drew, the Welsh basso, Lottie Lennox, in sundry ditties, and J. J. James, in a whistling and ventriloquial interlude, all secure full appreciation of their efforts; and the Bioscope, as usual, has its allotted place on the programme.

THE TURKISH BATH MAN TALKS TO YOU.

I SELL Gem Turkish Baths and the Gem Still. I sell them for profit—to make a living. This is quite true—I cannot live on air, but my business results from my enthusiasm for Turkish Bathing, and the benefits derived therefrom ten years ago—long before I started to sell Bath Cabinets. I have never needed a doctor since, nor have my three children been under the doctor.

I use the Gem Turkish Bath Cabinet and the Gem Still regularly. So do my children. To the constant use of the Gem Turkish Bath Cabinet and to the use of water made absolutely pure by being distilled by the Gem Still, I ascribe my immunity from trouble. I also put it down to these health-giving appliances that my children are so robust.

I sell two specialities for health and happiness—for health alone means the greatest happiness.

I sell for a profit, but I use what I sell. I believe in both my specialities. I impeach no business man's ethics, but I do say no man believes in what he sells more than I do.

I find it easy to keep well and happy. I find it easy to keep my children well and happy. I find it easy to keep disease at bay.

But it is not easy for everyone. I know some people who are always very ill and very unhappy. I know still more who are always out of sorts and never quite happy. I know many more people who are like barometers—set fair one day, cloudy and depressed the next. I suppose there are many people always well always fit, but if you look around, you will be surprised how few you know.

Are you well, fit, bright, day after day, week after week? Do you pay for every bright day by a week of depression? If you are like this, you are wasting your life. You do not count life by the days you are ill or ailing, dull or depressed. You count it by the days in which you are splendidly vigorous, calm, clear-headed, and confident. And if you count life this way it is surprising how short life is to some people.

If you could lead an active, outdoor life you would be better. That is the up-to-date doctor's remedy for nearly all the ills—he has more faith in it than drugs. But you cannot buy exercise and fresh air in a bottle. It is a delightful remedy, but to the worker it is simply impossible. The average man cannot hunt or golf three or four days a week, or follow cricket, yachting, or mountaineering. He is lucky if he gets two or three hours' cycling a week, and even then it must be very mild exercise, for sedentary habits make serviceable exercise impossible.

My Gem Turkish Bath does for me what exercise in the fresh air does for the man who has heaps of money and plenty of leisure to follow a vigorous sport. It keeps me fit, and it will keep you fit. The Gem Turkish Bath does in a very short time what exercise achieves in a much longer period. It keeps the pores of the skin acting freely—perspiring—which is the underlying principle of all exercise. But my Cabinet is a much more practical method, because it gets the same results as exercise without interfering with the business and social round.

Mind, I don't decry exercise. I am an ardent advocate of the fresh air, the open window, and exercise, but it isn't within everyone's means to obtain Nature's benefits.

Every inch of your skin is covered with tiny pores—there are millions of them. They are not there by accident. Their free action is just as vital to your existence as your heart, or kidneys, or any other organ. Each day the skin should perform its share of the work of cleansing the body, of eliminating a variety of poisons and waste products set up in the blood. Other organs take a share in this cleansing process—the lungs, the liver, the kidneys, and the bowels, but they only take a share. If the skin does not undertake its fair share in the cleansing process, you cannot be well—for one or more of the other organs are overworked.

When your skin is not acting freely, many things happen to you. From the minor ills which make life a discomfort to the serious ailment which turns life into a curse, nearly every trouble is due to sedentary and unhealthy habits. The constant feeling of being under par, easily tired, slightly depressed, afraid of vague dangers—dangers which cannot be put into words—are first signs. Tendency to colds is another.

Diseases due to acids in the blood—gout, rheumatism, sciatica lumbago—are more serious manifestations. Neuralgia, headache, intense nervous distress, and all the troubles due to a poisoned nervous system, which, if allowed to progress, lead to complete nervous breakdown, arise from a blood-supply improperly cleansed.

I do not have days of weariness and discomfort. I seldom have aches and pains. I do not constantly catch colds, and spend uncomfortable days nursing them. I do not have days of depression. I do not go about with a head like lead. I do not feel as if the roof of my head were coming off. I use the Gem Cabinet regularly. If I am tired after a hard day, the Gem Cabinet restores me. If I have a symptom of chill or cold, the Gem Cabinet checks it in the first stage of development. If I have a hint of muscular trouble, the Gem Turkish Bath Cabinet drives it away and leaves muscular freedom and strength in its place.

My Gem Turkish Bath will do the same for you, for your family, for all who are ill. It assists Nature in a reasonable, logical, practical way. No filthy drugs, no temporary alleviation. It is not an anodyne for pain. It's a cure. And after it has cured, it is a pleasant, revivifying habit which keeps you well all the time.

Count up your doctor's bills, your drug bills, your going away expenses—chasing the health you never find—that elusive quality which means happiness. The pounds you spend—the pounds you work so hard to make. And the hours you waste in dreary, depressing, painful days and nights—hours at work which might be done better and made more profitable, hours of precious leisure which you cannot enjoy, hours when you should sleep, but which you spend in unreasoning terror, waiting for the dawn. My Gem Cabinet costs only 30s.—less than a tiny doctor's bill, less than a week-end away, less than your bill at the chemist's for drugs which do you no good. You cannot do without my Cabinet, for it will make you a better man or woman every week of your life. You will wonder how you lived without it, when you have had the Cabinet in your home for a fortnight, or you will marvel at something more wonderful still—the sheer joy which comes to a constantly ailing man or woman who gets well—right well—radiantly, confidently, splendidly well—for the first time.

And if it will help to convince you, let me tell you that hundreds of physicians use and recommend these Cabinets.

I meant to tell you about my Gem Still. But that will keep—space does not allow of it here. But you should know more about my two Specialities—the Gem Turkish Bath Cabinet and the Gem Still. Write for full particulars, mentioning THE ERA, or call and inspect them. It costs you nothing to know all about them. It might mean your physical salvation. There is nothing of the "confidence trick" about any of my health specialities. You can reason out anything for yourself, and decide safely whether these good things are of any good to you.

WIDNES.—ALEXANDRA THEATRE.—Proprietor and Manager Mr. Jas. Kiddie.—This week Boswell's Royal stage circus holds the boards here. The performing ponies—twenty in number—are a great attraction. Clever jumping feats are performed by the Bros. Austin; Kame Kasuda, a Jap, does one of the cleverest turns ever seen locally, his slide from the roof of the theatre, balancing on a rope, is very sensational; the Musical Palmers do their well-known turn with general acceptance; Charley, foot equilibrist, wins much applause, and the clever act by dogs on a rapidly revolving table, is popular.

Renee contributes a refined instrumental number; Mr. C. talks and sings amusingly; Maud Courtney provides an interesting item; the Falcons are skilful acrobats, and Flo Cecil is a charming comedienne and dancer.

AGRICULTURAL HALL.—Secretary, Mr. W. B. Barnett.—Mr. Waller Jeff's New Century pictures are extending their stay here another week, and packed houses are the rule. Chief amongst the films is that of the Marathon race from Birmingham to Wolverhampton on Saturday last, and an entertaining musical turn is provided by Messrs Ford and Hanson.

WORCESTER. — THEATRE ROYAL. — Lessee and Manager, Mr. Arthur Carlton; Acting-Manager, Mr. F. Le Wards.—The presentation for the first time in Worcester of Hall Caine's The Prodigal Son has proved a great attraction to theatre-goers throughout the week, and Mr. Wentworth Croke's powerful company has provided an excellent representation of the drama. The play, following as it does the main lines of the novel, though substituting a happy for a tragic ending, affords many thrilling situations, and the wide scope for picturesque staging and magnificent costumes is taken full advantage of. Mr. Gordon Macintosh, in the title-rôle, provides a powerful psychological study and exhibits the necessary versatility and melodramatic power. As the brother, Magnus Stephenson, Mr. Hugh Montgomery, exercises well-calculated restraint, but never fails to impress; Miss Valerie Crespin doubles the parts of Thora Neilson and her daughter Elin with eminent success; and Miss Mildred Cottrell, possessed of a fine stage presence, is admirably suited to the part of Helga Neilson; Mr. Charles Cooper is well suited as Stephen Magnussum, and Miss Barbara Gott gives a convincing impersonation of his wife, Anna. The Oscar Neilson of Mr. Philip Renouf is a noticeable impersonation; and Miss Marie Harcourt is excellent as Margaret Neilson; Mr. Ernest Rivarz is a capital Dr. Olsen; and Mr. E. Christopher, the sheriff; while innumerable small parts are adequately represented.

PANTOMIME GOSSIP.

The coming of King Pantomime is being heralded by signs of activity all over the land, and the arrangements already made for his advent give promise that the Christmas of 1908 will compare with that of any former year in respect to the number and importance of its productions. The West End is to be well supplied with pantomime, three being again presented in the neighbourhood of the Strand.

The Lyceum will be the first of the London pantomimes, and will start the season on Wednesday, Dec. 23, when Messrs. Smith and Carpenter will produce their second annual, Little Red Riding Hood. Miss Dorothy Craske will, as last year, be the principal boy, and Miss Frances Cameron, who has been appearing in America as the Merry Widow, will play principal girl. A comic part is to be given to Julian Rose, also from America, who made his London début back in the summer at the Coliseum. M. Edouard Espinosa has invented ingenious arrangements for the ballet scenes, and there will be some startling surprises in Toy-land.

Drury Lane will, as is its wont, reserve its annual until the evening of Boxing Day, when Dick Whittington will be produced on the scale of magnificence for which Mr. Arthur Collins and his supporters are so justly renowned. The treatment of the tale by Mr. Hickory Wood and Mr. Collins will be on novel lines, the action passing mainly in England. The story begins at once in Eastcheap on St. Valentine's Day, and after stirring scenes passes to Highgate-hill, where the Spirit of Wealth rises from a pond. In his sleep Dick has a vision of commerce and travel, culminating in a superb picture of a fairy Guildhall, with Dick himself as Lord Mayor of London.

The second part opens in the Harbour of Fantasia, a beautiful set, full of life and bustle, and after a scene in which Dick rids the town of the rats after the fashion of the Pied Piper of Hamelin, Dick returns, a millionaire, to London, and the next great effect is Whittington receiving the freedom of the City of London. The Fitzwarren Stores provides the principal comic scene. The chief parts in the cast are allotted to Miss Queenie Leighton, Miss Truly Shattuck, Mr. Wilkie Bard, Mr. Neil Kenyon, Mr. Arthur Conquest, Miss Marie Wilson, Miss Marie George, Mr. Aubrey Fitzgerald, and Mr. Ali.

Children will be delighted to hear that again this Christmas there will be at Drury Lane Theatre a real old-fashioned harlequinade to wind up the pantomime. Good clowns are scarce, and Mr. Arthur Collins was so pleased with Bob Pender and his troupe in their performance last year that he has re-engaged them.

The Adelphi will start operations on Christmas Eve, when Cinderella will be staged by Mr. George Edwardes and Mr. Robert Courtneidge. The book is by the latter gentleman and Mr. A. M. Thompson, and the story will be found to be a fantastic and engrossing one, relieved by comic interludes inseparable from a Christmas piece. Opportunities for scenic display will be taken in the transformation of winter into spring, which arises out of the story, but the chief spectacle will be that in which Cinderella is robed in dazzling white, amid surroundings of crystals, pearls, and flowers of snowy hue, the picture being completed by the arrival of Cinderella's coach of crystal, illuminated by glittering gems, and drawn by six snow-white ponies with attendant postillions and grooms. The heroine will be played by Miss Phyllis Dare and the Prince by Miss Carrie Moore. Mr. Dan Rolyat will have a part in which his comic abilities will shine, and the dame will be played by Mr. John Humphries.

The twelfth annual pantomime at the Royal County Theatre, Kingston-on-Thames, this year will be Cinderella, and the arrangements for its production on Boxing Day are already well advanced. Mr. Davey, the managing-director is determined that the pantomime at Kingston this year shall be an even more gorgeous affair than any of the eleven pantomimes that have preceded, and no expense is being spared to accomplish this. The pantomime has again been designed and arranged by Mr. Davey, whilst the libretto and music have been written by Mr. Hugh Mytton. Mr. Rignold, the theatre chef d'orchestre, has again selected and arranged the music, whilst some magnificent scenery has been painted by Messrs. J. Harker and Geo. Miller, and Mrs. Davey is busily employed in designing and fashioning the handsome costumes. Amongst the principal artists engaged are:—Messrs. Lauri Wylie, Arthur Carlton, Bobbie Hall, George Hirste, C. Kingsley, and F. Percy Cann; Misses Bessie Butt, Alice Coverick, Dolly Grassdorf, Hilda Vining, Edith Deverell, and Nellie James. There will be a chorus and ballet of sixty performers, and the whole will be produced under the direction of Mr. Davey.

The subject chosen for the pantomime at the Elephant and Castle this year is The Babes in the Wood, which will be produced on Christmas Eve by Mr. Lester Collingwood. Miss Kitty Clinton will be principal boy, Miss Alice Maple principal girl, Mr. Charles Clarke Baron, Mr. Will Lorenzi Dame; and in the cast will also be the Sisters Morgan, Miss Grace Mortimer, Miss Hester Reeve, Miss Violet Roumaine, and Miss Lilian O'Brien.

Mr. Robert Arthur's eleventh Kennington pantomime will be Red Riding Hood. Boxing Day, the occasion of the production, is practically booked up.

The pantomime at the Grand, Glasgow, will be Cinderella, and Messrs. R. C. Buchanan and Ernest Stevens produce it for Moss' Empires, Ltd., on Dec. 9. The company includes Miss Violet Halls and Miss Queenie Finnis as principal boy and girl; Messrs. Whit Cunliffe, George French, Tom Conway, and Barry Lupino will provide lots of humour; Misses Kate Walbran and Nellie Cozens will be the elder sisters of Cinderella; and Fairy parts will be played by Misses Olive Tempest and Edie Docherty. The Lottie Stone Troupe of Dancers are also engaged.

This year's pantomime at Belfast will be Jack and Jill, and will be produced on Christmas Eve. The libretto is by Mr. J. Hickory Wood, and Mr. Samuel P. Swanton will be responsible for the composition and selection of the music. The cast will include Miss Dorothy Ward, Miss Minnie Cunningham, Miss Stella de Marney, Messrs. George Lashwood, John A. Warden, Harry Trevanion, Fred Conquest, George Miller, &c. The costumes will be designed by Comelli, executed by Miss Agnes Scott, with the assistance of Alias, London, and the entire production will be under the experienced direction of Mr. Fred W. Warden, managing-director of the Theatre Royal and Palace, Belfast.

Messrs. Milton Bode and Edward Compton have again arranged with Mr. G. Brydon Phillips to produce pantomime at Chester, and the latter has secured the following ladies and gentlemen to interpret their annual:—Mesdames Ethel Dunbar, Mavis Hope, Maggie Allwood, Kitty Vivian, Sisters Milburn and Dane; Messrs. Tom Ashby, Bernard and Weston, Harry Lomas, H. Langlois, Lester Digby, Eugene and Willie. Mr. George Beverley will stage-manage, and Mr. W. T. Gliddon will look after the musical department. Mr. Phillips, who has many friends in Chester, will personally superintend the production.

STAGE STAFF GOSSIP.

The meeting of employees at Terry's Theatre last Sunday evening was fairly well attended, but considering the importance of the subject to be considered one would have expected the house to be crowded out. Mr. James Cullen, master carpenter at the St. James's Theatre, presided, and among others on the stage were Mr. G. H. Dyball, stage-manager at the London Pavilion, Mr. P. Sheridan, electrician at the Waldorf Theatre, Mr. J. Reid, president of the Carpenters' Society, Mr. Wm. Barbour, electrician at the St. James's Theatre, Mr. Charles Thorogood, president of the General Staff Branch N.A.T.E., Mr. H. Lane, of the Savoy Theatre, Mr. J. N. Hunt, of the New Theatre, and others.

The chairman, on rising, said he welcomed those present on behalf of the National Association of Theatrical Employees, and he felt sure they would agree that the purpose of the meeting was one deserving the most careful consideration, and, he ventured to say, the hearty support of all who, in any capacity, were employed in the work of the theatre or the music hall. The struggle for existance was hard enough in any occupation, but it was harder in this business by reason of the uncertainty and irregularity of employment. It was, therefore, very desirable that employees should make provision for the ills which arise out of the want of employment, a want that was so productive of ill-health and misery to a man and his dependants. Employees could do by mutual aid what it was impossible to do by individual effort. The larger the number of those who co-operated for mutual benefit the lighter would be the tax upon the individual and the greater the benefit it would be possible to provide for each member.

The chairman said he did not propose to go into the details of the scheme; the secretary would do that, but he strongly recommended the proposal for their acceptance. The chairman then called on Mr. Wm. Johnson, general secretary of the National Association, to submit the scheme recommended by the committee. Mr. Johnson addressed the meeting at length. He read letters from Mr. Edward Terry and Mr. Forbes Robertson relating to the use of the theatre for the meeting, and expressed the hope that, as they met in "The Third Floor Back," where the appeal to the better self of men and women so effectively removed the distrust and envy that made life so unwholesome, it would be a good omen for this meeting. Mr. Johnson dealt with the present state of affairs and the sufferings caused by the neglect of men to make some such provisions as they now proposed. He had nothing but praise for the many house sick clubs and slate clubs with which various sections of the employees were connected, but their usefulness was very limited, and, owing to their small membership, could not provide adequate benefits during sickness or at death. In most cases the allowance at the death of a member was £10—a sum barely sufficient to pay the cost of the burial—and in very many cases the death of the breadwinner left his dependants in debt and face to face with destitution or very severe privations. They did not suggest that any scheme they could devise could provide work for members—and work was the main thing—but until the workers' charter, "The right to work," had been won, they could at least make provision for the sickness caused by want of work and worry, and place a member in the position of securing for his widow and dependants a substantial sum.

The scheme he had to submit aimed to provide, for a contribution of 6d. a week, sick pay as follows: 15s. a week for thirteen weeks, and, if necessary, 7s. 6d. a week for a further thirteen weeks, or a total of £14 odd during a period of six months in each year. The sum assured at death would be met by a levy of 6d. per member on the death of a member, and 3d. per member on the death of a member's wife. On a membership of 2,000 this would give £50 to the widow and £25 to the member on the death of his wife. Nothing like these benefits could be got elsewhere. It was also proposed that the surplus funds at the end of each year, less a small sum per head to carry on the fund, would be divided in equal proportions and shared out among the members. It must not, therefore, be assumed that the contribution of 6d. per week would be spent. If the sick claims were numerous the members would get the benefit, if they were few in number a portion of the contributions would be returned to the members. The committee proposed that until the rules were adopted and the fund opened no age-limit should be fixed, although when necessary a medical certificate of health would be required. This offer was of vital importance to the older men, who were now shut out of any sort of sick or funeral fund: many of them regretted their neglect in the past, and they should lose no time now in applying to join this fund. Members would be entitled to half benefit after three months' membership and full benefit after six months' membership; but it was proposed that no levy for death benefit be imposed in the case of any member with less than six months' membership. The committee had seriously considered the position of women employees, and while they were anxious to devise some method by which the women could participate in the movement, there were obvious reasons why sickness in their case would have to be treated on a special basis. It would rest largely with the women themselves to indicate what measure of support they were willing to give to the scheme, and whether they would prefer a different scale of contributions and benefits and a section of their own.

Mr. Johnson said he wished it to be understood that these suggestions and observations were subject to the confirmation of those who would join the fund. The committee of the National Association would be the governing body to administer the fund, and the office and staff of the Society would be utilised to secure economical and efficient management. All stage employees who were, or became, members of the National Association, resident in the Metropolitan area, would be eligible to join, and any other employee bona-fire connected with the work or management of a theatre or music hall in the Metropolitan area, such as box-office staff, billing and advertising staff, attendants, hall-keepers, firemen, dressers, supers, &c., would be eligible to join, and with a large membership a great deal of good would be done. They could not get the best result for their means and efforts without centralising their means and efforts, and he hoped that the proposal would receive general support.

Mr. J. Reid, president of the Carpenters' Branch, made an effective speech in support of the proposal. Mr. G. H. Dyball followed, and referred to the practice of circulating collecting sheets among the staffs of the theatres and halls, which this proposal would put an end to. Mr. J. N. Hunt also spoke in support of the proposal.

A number of questions were asked by Mr. Cooper of the Vaudeville, Mr. W. Clements of Hackney Empire, Mr. C. A. Keeble of the Coliseum, Mr. Mitchell of the Scala, and others, but they mainly related to matters outside the scope of the meeting.

The chairman, in concluding the proceedings, urged all those present to obtain a supply of forms from the stewards, and induce those in their various halls and theatres to fill them in and return them to the secretary, so that they could be notified of a further meeting. A hearty vote of thanks to Mr. Edward Terry and Mr. Forbes Robertson for the use of the theatre was agreed to with cheers, and the meeting terminated.

It may be stated, in answer to a suggestion made at the meeting that the proposals of the committee were too good to be possible, that there are over 100 theatres and music halls in the Metropolitan area, and on a moderate average of twenty members from each the possible total suggested—2,000—would be reached. As a matter of fact, including, as the scheme does, all sections of employees, there are from 3,000 to 4,000 eligible to join. The estimate of the committee is, therefore, a reasonable one.

We understand that many applications and enquiries have been received since the meeting, although very few women have as yet applied. Those interested are asked to get a list of others willing to join and to distribute membership forms, which may be obtained from Mr. Wm. Johnson, 29, Wellington-street, Strand. The committee are considering the issue of a further circular and arrangements for several meetings.

A meeting of members of the Theatrical Carpenters' Branch of the N.A.T.E. will be held on Sunday evening in the Salisbury Hotel, St. Martin's-lane, at 8.30. A matter of special importance will be submitted. A report will be given on the annual concert and the share-out fund. A deputation, consisting of Messrs. H. Porter, W. Beavington, G. Pickering, E. Arnott, Ed. Stow, J. Hunt, and Wm. Johnson, from the No. 1 Branch, will attend the meeting on a matter concerning the members of the society.

A meeting in connection with the Birmingham Branch of the N.A.T.E. will be held in the Victoria Inn, John Bright-street, on Sunday evening. Several representative trade unionists will attend. All employees connected with theatres and music halls are invited.

The arrangements for the employees' annual concert at His Majesty's Theatre are almost completed. Miss Ethel Irving and Mr. Sydney Valentine have added their names to the list of patrons. Mr. George Edwardes has kindly given permission for Miss May de Sousa, Miss Jessie Broughton, and Mr. Alfred Lester to appear. KINGSTON THEATRE CO.

The twelfth annual ordinary general meeting of the shareholders of the Kingston-on-Thames Theatre Co., Ltd., was held at the Royal County Theatre, Kingston, on Wednesday afternoon, under the presidency of Mr. Wm. Millwood, chairman of the directors.

The balance-sheet and profit and loss account showed the receipts for the period to have been £11,764 15s. 2d., and the expenses £11,128 10s. 4d., leaving a balance of £636 4s. 10d. After paying mortgage interest there remained a sum of £397 12s. 5d., to which was added £104 4s. 11d. brought forward from last year, making an available balance of £501 17s. 4d. From this amount an interim dividend at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum to March 31, 1907, had been paid on the preference shares, the directors now recommending the payment of the final dividend, making 6 per cent. for the year, and that the balance, £68 19s. 4d. be carried forward.

In moving the adoption of the report and balance-sheet, Mr. Millwood referred to the recent conversion of the theatre into a music hall. He said:—"It is with some feelings of pain that I address you to-day, for, after having striven for eleven years, and striven very hard, to keep this theatre open as a profitable concern, on purely legitimate lines, it has not proved a brilliant financial success, although it has held its own and earned on the average 5 per cent. on its issued share capital; but this, Gentlemen, is all that we have been able to do, so we have decided on a partial change of policy, and, as you are doubtless aware, we are now in the middle of our first season of 'two-houses-a-night varieties.' Although in making this change we have fallen into line with so many other theatres, we most sincerely hope that we shall not permanently become a music hall, and so lose touch with any of our regular patrons, for we still hope to run our usual pantomime season, and during certain seasons of the year to continue to bring to Kingston the best dramatic and other attractions.

"There are various causes that have led us to adopt this 'variety' innovation—first and foremost the extreme difficulty that Mr. Davey has experienced, a difficulty that has become greater and greater each year, of securing a sufficient number of good companies to attract the public. Theatrical business all over the country has been so bad that many of the leading touring managers, gentlemen on whom, a few years ago, we could depend on to fill several of the weeks of the year, have either ceased to send out tours altogether, or have reduced their speculations to one, or possibly two, companies where they used to send out a dozen; and, moreover, the tours that used to run from August Bank Holiday till Christmas, and again from February to Whit Week, are now reduced to about eight weeks in the autumn, and even less in the spring. We have carried out every requirement of the County Council to the entire satisfaction of its officials. As you can see for yourselves, the theatre is improved in every way, and Mr. Davey, on behalf of the Kingston-on-Thames Theatre Company, is now the holder of practically every possible licence."

Mr. Peter Davey, the managing-director, replying to a vote of thanks, said although the profits had been small, yet they had earned profits, and that was more than could be said of 80 per cent. of the theatres throughout the country, and that was one of the reasons why so many theatres had been turned into music halls. Whether Kingston wanted a music hall remained to be seen. Directly opposition in the town took a practical form he thought it his duty to advocate that the theatre should become a music hall for certain seasons of the year, but it was entirely against his own personal inclinations that he did so.

The retiring director, Mr. F. W. Jones, was re-elected

NEW YORK, Nov. 11.—The Boys and Betty, a musical play, in three acts, by George V. Hobart and Silvio Hein, has restored prosperity to Wallack's Theatre after a rather long interval, in which nothing seemed to hit the mark, several productions having been tried and found wanting. The personal popularity of Miss Marie Cahill, who plays the principal part of Betty, is an important factor in the success of the new attraction, for Miss Cahill always provides herself with some capital songs, and, what is more, she has a clever way of singing them. In this instance, the delightful melody of her final number, "An Arab love song," charms the ear and refuses to be forgotten, and there are other enjoyable numbers. "Take plenty of shoes" is about a farmer who gives his son some useful advice when he leaves the farm for the metropolis. He'll be a long way from home and may have to depend on "Shank's mare" in coming back, so he is warned to "take plenty of shoes." When Miss Cahill sings "I love to go shopping," she becomes a shop-girl at the ribbon counter of a department store, and waits on invisible customers, gossiping with an invisible friend the while, and gushing when her sweetheart comes along. "A little farther" is a topical song, with encôre verses innumerable, and "Auf Wiedersehen" is pretty and pleasing. As a musical "show" The Boys and Betty is decidedly out of the ordinary, being commendably free from the conventional tricks and hackneyed methods of this kind of entertainment.

Betty, an American girl, while studying abroad, marries Casimir Barbeau, a French orchestra leader, who believes himself to be a musical genius, but who meets with very little success. In their humble circumstances Betty's existence is brightened by a coterie of lively friends, including four boyish art students, an American millionaire and his daughter, and Paul Gerard, who is fonder of Betty than any of her other friends. Barbeau lords it over his wife in such a disagreeable way that she finally leaves her home in Monte Carlo and goes to Paris, where she makes a success as a fashionable florist, with the assistance of Major Gordon, a Southern officer who knew her father "before the war." On Christmas Eve, a year later, her husband appears on the scene and demands an interest in the business under the French marriage laws. Betty refuses to accept the advice of her friends and obtain a divorce, although it is suspected that Barbeau is too friendly with Nanon Duval, a young woman with a hankering for the stage. To rid herself of Barbeau Betty agrees to pay him a thousand francs to go away and not molest her. In the last act Betty and her friends are spending a week at Major Gordon's villa in a suburb of Paris. In the midst of the festivities Barbeau and Nanon come up the river bank, not knowing whose grounds they are in. They are pursued by a notary, and the loud talking attracts Betty from a summer-house near by. The notary appeals to her, and when she identifies her husband and Nanon the fact is disclosed that the notary has just married the pair in a neighbouring town, and they have left without paying the fee. Barbeau is forced to sign the necessary papers for a divorce from Betty in order to escape being prosecuted for bigamy, and Betty is affianced to Paul Gerard.

Miss Clara Palmer as Nanon wore some beautiful gowns and danced very gracefully in her "Folies-Bergère"song. Mr. Eugene Cowles as Major Gordon, Mr. John E. Kellerd as Casimir Barbeau, and Mr. Edgar Atchison-Ely as Paul Gerard were entirely successful in their respective rôles. The chorus was beautifully gowned, and the scene in the Paris flower shop, the bright interior contrasting with the snowstorm outside, was very effective. The last act opens with a realistic picture of a sudden summer shower that ends with a rainbow.

"The Great Question," described as an American play of modern life, in four acts, by Frederick Paulding, is the current attraction at the Majestic Theatre. It reminds one of Dion Boucicault's drama, The Octoroon, as it deals with the racial problem. Alicia, daughter of Judge Savernex, of the United States Supreme Court, arrives at womanhood without knowing that she is the child of a "mixed marriage," and has negro blood in her veins. She is engaged to a magnanimous young fellow, Philip Infield, an Assistant Attorney-General. Certain unscrupulous officials try to bribe Savernex in the interests of a railroad, but he refuses to sell his decision in the case at issue, and an attempt is made to influence him by communicating the truth about her parentage to Alicia. She tells her fiancé, and he immediately declares that it makes no difference. Alicia disagrees with him on that point, however, and sends him away, although he tells her that he will continue to wait and hope. Thus the "great question" is answered in the negative in this case, and the conventional "happy ending" is conspicuous by its absence. Miss Jessie Bonstelle plays Alicia with convincing sincerity and naturalness, and the other characters are well represented.

Mr. Henry E. Dixey has succeeded Mr. Edwin Stevens in the title-rôle of The Devil at the Garden Theatre, and his interpretation pleases the large audiences that attend the performances of this unusual play. Mr. Savage has sent the original company "on the road." At the Belasco Theatre, where Mr. Fiske's production of Molnar's play is prospering, Mr. George Arliss's subtle and effective representation of his satanic majesty is one of the most interesting characterisations of the hour.

"The Patriot," the new comedy by J. Hartley Manners and William Collier, is to be presented in London next May by Mr. Collier and an American company. In order that Londoners may be warned in time, notice is hereby given that the play (according to the Press agent) is "an unflinching American view of the average Englishman and of English frailties."

Mr. John Drew, according to recent announcements, is tired of appearing in modern society plays, and is anxious to return to the Shakespearean and old English comedy rôles, in which he won distinction many years ago at Daly's Theatre. At the conclusion of his present engagement in Jack Straw at the Empire Theatre, Mr. Drew will begin a long tour, that will take him across the Continent to San Francisco, and will include British Columbia. After that he contemplates appearing as Benedick in a sumptuous revival of Much Ado About Nothing.

Miss Eleanor Robson is appearing in a new play called Vera, the Medium, by Richard Harding Davis. Spiritualism is its theme, and in the climax at the end of the third act there is "a striking and mysterious illusion."

Miss Annie Russell, in John Valentine's comedy The Stronger Sex, is to be the next attraction at Weber's Theatre. Paid in Full, now running there, will close its eight months' engagement on Broadway on the 21st inst.

"The Struggle," by Edwin Tilton, in which Miss Mary Mannering appeared last week at the Providence Opera House, bears a resemblance to The New Magdalen, as it tells the story of a wronged woman, named Helen Dare, who tries to blot out her past by assuming the identity of a young widow who suddenly expires at a moment when Helen and no one else is present. Helen appropriates the dead woman's papers and goes to America, where she becomes the wife of a rich Kentuckian, and enjoys eight years of happiness. But her former companion and betrayer turns up, and proves to be her husband's brother. He threatens to divulge her secret, but meets with a fatal accident, and the wife's past is hidden for ever.

SYDNEY, Oct. 13.—Messrs. Meynell and Gunn have taken the Palace Theatre, and on the 10th they produced Two Little Sailor Boys with an almost complete cast of Australians. This is the third of Walter Howard's dramas staged by the enterprising firm, and it was as well mounted as the others. Miss Lilian Meyers, handsome and clear speaking, was Lola Yorke, and she made a distinct success in the part. Miss Lorna Forbes made a charming Mildred Grey. The boy Cyril was admirably portrayed by Mis Louise Carbasse, and Miss Maisie Maxwell scored a distinct success in her portraiture of Tom Yorke, a most meritorious and conscientious performance. Jack Jolly, the cheery tar, had a capital representative in Mr. Harry Halley, and he joined Mr. Leo Chateau (Benjamin Baxter) in providing the comic element. Miss Maud Chetwynd gave pretty Lucy Wilson a prominent place in the story, and the hero Noel Tregarthen had a manly actor, Mr. Conway Wingfield, to do him justice. Mr. Arthur Cowley (Lieutenant Redstone), Mr. Wilson Forbes (Admiral Grey), and Mr. James Lindsay (Jim Reyston) completed an excellent group of honest workers for an artistic success.

Mr. Frank Thornton made his farewell appearance in Sydney at the Palace on the 9th, and was enthusiastically sent off, speeches and "Auld Lang Syne" accentuating the fact that we have seen for the last time a genuine artist who made roaring fun without raising a blush. Sydney playgoers send best wishes with Mr. Thornton whithersoever he goes.

"Sunday" was revived by Mr. J. C. Williamson at the Royal with Miss Tittell Brune in her first and best impersonation as the honest girl on the diggings. Mr. Thomas Kingston was Colonel Brinthorpe, and in the last act he played most tactfully. Mr. Leonard Willey portrayed Arthur Brinthorpe with considerable credit. The rugged diggers had Mr. T. W. Lloyd (Jackey), Mr. Fred Cambourne (Davy), Mr. Frank Harcourt (Towzef), and Mr. Maurice Dudley (an excellent Lively) as their reflexes, and Mr. Roland Stavely was a good Tom Oxley. As the highborn Mrs. Naresby the management had secured Mrs. Robert Brough, and Miss Emma Temple was secured to play the Nun. Suffice it that these ladies did full justice to their respective rôles.

"The Belle of Mayfair," as presented by Messrs. Meynell and Gunn at the Criterion, is an artistic and financial success.

"The Merry Widow" is enjoying phenomenal booking, the "plan" counter at Paling's being crowded every day, and it is a very fine performance with Miss Florence Young, Mr. Gouriet, Mr. Reginald Roberts, and the rest in good music, amid beautiful scenery and wearing rich costumes. The matinee performances are crowded equally with the representations at night, and J. C. Williamson must be coining money with the comedy.

The Tivoli welcomed Osborn and Brooks, musical comedy artists, heartily, and cheered and laughed all through their nameless sketch. Abdullah's Arabs still remain the chief attraction. Mr. and Mrs. H. Meymott have a new farce, The Coon's Revelry, a cleverly-acted bit of fun. Burt Shepard, Fanny Power, Tod Lowen, Ted Kalman, Rochfort and Hart, Little Gertie Cremer, Bella Perman, and the rich contralto, Miss Nita Leete give a show which keeps Mr. Harry Rickards' reputation as selector of "good things" up to his high standard.

Madame Ada Crossley, coming back so soon after her last season, and following a long list of great concert stars, is, nevertheless, doing wonderful business. The Town Hall is crowded at every performance, and the "encore" element has reached the position of a real scandal. The demands made by a noisy minority, chiefly young people, now treble the programme, and the cries of "shame!" from the respectably-behaved portion have no effort on a Sydney general audience. The assisting artists, Percy Grainger (piano), Sametini (violin), John Harrison (tenor), and Hamilton Earle (bass), are all prime favourites, and a return series of Crossley concerts is anxiously looked forward to.

MELBOURNE, Oct. 13.—Her Majesty's Theatre.—Lessee, Mr. J. C. Williamson; Business-Manager, Mr. E. J. Tait.—After a successful season, Shakespeare's comedy, The Taming of the Shrew was withdrawn on Friday night, and on Saturday evening Camille was revived for a brief season, with Miss Margaret Anglin in the name part. Miss Anglin's acting throughout was forcible and convincing. Mr. Henry Kolker was well placed as Armand Duval, while the rest of the company filled their various rôles satisfactorily.

Bijou Theatre.—Lessee, Miss Florence Baines.—A large audience on Saturday evening assembled to renew their old laughing acquaintance with Miss Lancashire, Limited, the merry farce which served some months back to introduce Miss Florence Baines to the Melbourne public. Miss Baines's impersonation of the lass from Lancashire is as good as ever, and the fair and buxom Mary Ellen has apparently lost none of her power as a premier laugh-maker. Miss Baines is well supported by Miss Kitty Henningham, Mr. John Hesford, and the other members of her company. Miss Muriel Johnston, who is still with Miss Baines as private secretary, has proved by time, the best of all tests, that women are quite as much in their element in front of the house as men.

King's Theatre.—Lessee, Mr. William Anderson; Business Manager, Mr. Julius Grant.—The sensational drama, The Gayest of the Gay, is still running to good houses. Saturday night saw a packed house, which fully appreciated every incident in the play. On Saturday evening next The Bank of England will be staged for the first time in Melbourne.

Opera House.—Proprietor, Mr. Harry Rickards; Business-Manager, Mr. Fred Aydon.—The great Marconis (lady and gentleman) made their first appearance on Saturday evening, and astonished a packed house with their clever performance, which consists of some marvellous experiments with electricity. The audience was mystified and delighted. Other new items were included in the programme. Goodfellow and Gregson, who reappeared after a long absence, were highly amusing; the Sisters Reno danced cleverly; Miss Mignonette Kokin is an established favourite; Galetti's dogs and baboons keep the house in roars of laughter with their extraordinary antics; Fred Bluett is back with some new ditties; the Miles Stavordale Quintet charm all with their remarkable performance on their banjos, while the rest of a particularly strong company all contribute interesting and amusing "turns."

MASONS AT WORK.

It is gratifying to record that there is no apparent diminution in the interest taken by the members of the Dramatic Mark Lodge, and those of the Dramatic Royal Ark Mariners, in the immediate affairs of their respective coteries; and this fact was emphasised on Thursday, the 12th, when the Mark Brethren met to elect their Master for the ensuing year, as the reign of the present Master, Mr. J. Edward Hambleton, is fast drawing to a close. Before the Mark Lodge was opened the Royal Ark Mariners met, under the commandership of their first principal, Mr. Charles Cruikshanks, and proceeded to elect the commander for the ensuing year, the ballot being unanimously in favour of Mr. W. S. Lyon, a highly-esteemed member of the Chelsea Lodge. Mr. Clarence Coggin was again elected Treasurer, and Mr. W. Englefield Warden. Mr. Cruikshanks was ably assisted in his arduous duties by Messrs. Harry Nicholls, Clarence Sounes, and others.

Shortly after the closing of the Royal Ark Mariners Lodge, the Brethren met in the Mark Masons' Hall, and transacted the business of the day. Mr. J. Edward Hambleton was supported by his officers, as follows:—Clarence Coggin, I.P.M.; Geo. A. Keen, S.W.; Randulph J. Corbet (acting), J.W.; W. J. Keen, M.O.; W. H. White, S.O.; S. S. Percival, J.O.; Chas. Cruikshanks, Treasurer; Dr. Hotten George, R.M.; Harry Nicholls, Secretary; Chris Hilton, S.D.; J. H. Ryley, J.D.; Alfred Ellis, I.G.; Clarence Sounes, S.; and W. Englefield, T., and Messrs. W. Cree, H. G. Danby, H. C. de Lafontaine, A. G. Duck, Thomas Fraser, Douglas Gordon, W. J. Holloway, Ed. Humphrey, W. Laurence, Jas. Powell, and Lud. Simon, and Dr. E. Reynolds, a visitor.
